MR. ASQUITH (Fifeshire, E.): This Amendment, I think, raises a question of privilege upon which it is our duty at any rate to obtain your ruling, Sir. Under Section 65 of the Act of 1890, the expenses incurred by a local authority in the execution of the Act have to be defrayed in the case of an urban sanitary authority as general expenses, and in the case of a rural sanitary authority as special expenses, with a proviso in the latter case that the County Council may determine them to be general expenses. Therefore, as the law stood at the time this Bill was introduced in this House, the expenses were prima facie special expenses, and fell on special classes of ratepayers. This House, when in Committee, by Subsection 3, Clause 2, altered that part of the 65th Section of the Act of 1890, by providing that in future these expenses should be general and not special, the result being that the incidence of this particular form of local expenditure was cast, or might be cast, upon a different class of ratepayer. The House of Lords has, by the conjoint effect of this Amendment and of the schedule, taken these expenses from the category of general expenses, in which the House of Commons had put them, and replaced them in the category of special expenses. That, I submit, is a violation, which should be resented by the House, of the well established principle that where a provision is made by the House of Commons and embodied in a Bill, and sent to the House of Lords, which in any way affects or alters the incidence of local taxation, it is not within the competence of the House of Lords, as a matter of constitutional privilege, to amend or alter that provision. I have to ask you, Sir, whether the Amendment just read does not in fact violate that well-established principle. May I, if not out of order, endeavour to anticipate an answer that might conceivably be given—namely, that what the House of Lords has done in this case, though in form to amend the financial proposals of the House of Commons, is in substance merely to reinstate the preexisting law. That I also submit cannot be within the competence of the House of Lords, for the Amendment takes the form of replacing in the Bill that which would have been the general law of the land if the Bill had not passed the House of Commons; and I would point out, further, that the House of Lords have not contented themselves with replacing in the Bill the pre-existing law, but have proceeded to amend that law. They have, in fact, omitted some five or six lines of the section of the principal Act, and have made a further Amendment in the proviso at the end of the clause. They have not, in fact, reinstated the clause as it previously existed, and have amended a proposition made in this House in a matter which is beyond their competence. I therefore respectfully submit that this Amendment is a breach of the privileges of the House.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir ROBERT FINLAY, Inverness Burghs): On the point of order I should like to say a few words in reference to what my right hon. friend has said. He is perfectly accurate in saying that under the Act of 1890 expenses of this kind were special expenses unless they were declared to be general expenses. He was not quite accurate with reference to the effect of the Bill as it left the House of Commons. As the Bill left this House, these expenses were general, but there was a power given to the Local Government Board, if they pleased, to make them special under Section 29 of the Act of 1894. What the House of Lords has done is to change the Bill in a way which leaves the law exactly as it was under the Act of 1890. They are special expenses unless the council declares them to be general. Therefore, I contend that there has not been any interference with the privileges of this House. My right hon. friend has said that the House of Lords altered the law because they had struck out certain words from Sub-section 3 of Section 65 of the Act of 1890. That is perfectly true. As the Bill left this House certain words in Sub-section 3 were struck out, and all the House of Lords did was to eliminate certain words in the proviso, which had consequently become unnecessary and meaningless. I therefore submit, Mr. Speaker, that there has been no breach of privilege, and that the House of Lords have restored the law as it was before this Bill was introduced.

MR. HALDANE (Haddingtonshire): On the point of order I would wish, with reference to what has fallen from the Attorney General, to draw attention to what the effect of the Lords Amendments really will be, because it seems to me they will work very differently from the manner stated by the hon. Gentleman. Under the section as it stood, in the case of rural sanitary authorities the special expenses would fall on the special district concerned, save where the burden of such expense was ordered by the county council to be borne by the contributory places, and was deemed to be expense incurred for the common benefit of all the contributory places liable. That is to say, all the contributory places must pay except where the county council shows any special cause why the expense should fall in one contributory place only. That was a power of substance, because it enabled the authority to say that the improvement had been for the benefit of a whole group of districts. The House of Lords by its action has taken away that power from the county councils, and consequently in all cases these rates will be special rates, and must be borne by the place for the benefit of which the improvement was made, although that place might be ill able to bear them. I submit, therefore, that the House of Lords has not only restored the existing law, but has made a very substantial alteration in the incidence of taxation for this purpose.

*MR. SPEAKER: When this Bill was considered on the Report stage the hon. Member for Thirsk had an Amendment on the Paper relating to this matter, and an objection was taken that it was out of order because it proposed to alter the incidence of taxation. It was not the same as the Amendment that was carried in the House of Lords. The Attorney General stated that the Amendment in that shape did or possibly might alter the incidence of taxation, and both sides being apparently in agreement, I did not go into it further, and ruled it out of order on the Report stage. With regard to the Lords Amendment, it appears to me that it is an alteration that brings us back to the state of the existing law; it does not alter the existing law. As to the statement that the alteration is different from the law as proposed by the Commons, I confess I do not, upon examination, think that it is an alteration which affects the privileges of this House. It does not appear to me to alter the incidence of taxation but rather to affect to a very limited extent the power of a public body to alter the rate from general to special in one case and from special to general in the other. I confess I do not think it is a matter which touches the question of rating in such a way as to effect an infringement of the privileges of this House.

MR. CHANNING (Northamptonshire, E.): The House of Commons having decided that certain expenses should be general and certain other expenses should be special, I ask you, Sir, whether the Amendments of the House of Lords do not transfer a portion of the burden of the expenditure from one class of ratepayers to another class in the same area, and whether the House of Lords have a right to alter the wording of a bill so as to levy in effect taxation on a new class of ratepayers or to impose a larger degree of taxation on another class.

*MR. SPEAKER: That is putting over again the arguments which have been already dealt with.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS BILL.

Lords Amendments considered.

Lords Amendment—

"In page 1, line 12, after 'tenant' insert 'Provided always, that in estimating the value of any such improvement, there shall not be taken into account, as part of the improvement made by the tenant, what is justly due to the inherent capabilities of the soil'"

—read a second time.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said Amendment."

Mr. HALDANE thought there would be a very general opinion that the Government ought to stick to their guns. When the Bill was last before the House the Government were assailed with immense vigour by a small but compact body of hon. Gentlemen who generally directed their attacks on theological points, but who on that occasion betook themselves to metaphysics. On all sides there was a protest against the repetition in the Government Bill of words which, it became clear during the debate, had no intelligible meaning; and the Minister for Agriculture in a very clear and definite way expressed the view of the Government that that clause or proviso was not one which ought to remain in the Bill. The question, it was pointed out, was not of substance; it was not a case of introducing any new principle into the Bill, but of removing words which were calculated to puzzle even acute minds. The Government took the opportunity of removing these words from the existing law; but now the Lords, thanks to the exertions of the vigorous party opposite, had reinserted them. But that did not seem to him to be any reason why the Government should run away from the very sensible attitude taken up by the Minister for Agriculture, and go back on what they had said to the House a week or two ago. He hoped the House would disagree with the Lords Amendment.

Sir ROBERT FINLAY said his hon. and learned friend was perfectly accurate in saying that the removal of this proviso was not intended to make any change in the law and would not make any such change. On the other hand, it was stated with considerable force that to remove that proviso gave rise to a feeling that it was intended to alter the law. The former of those considerations prevailed with this House; the latter prevailed in another place. It was now for the House to determine whether, for the sake of removing this proviso which would have no effect in altering the law, it was prepared to lose the Bill, which it was admitted on all hands contained some provisions of value. Under these circumstances, and as the Government were anxious to see the Bill become law, he hoped the House would agree with the Lords Amendment.

Mr. CHANNING said it was a great pity that the Government had decided to take the course they had done. He believed it would create a good deal of dissatisfaction in the country. The omission of the proviso was pressed upon the President of the Board of Agriculture by an influential deputation, and it was with general assent that it had been omitted. The omission had also been supported by the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Agriculture, and the President of the Local Government Board on the Commission on Agriculture. It was perfectly true that in point of law, perhaps, it did not alter the law or make any substantial change to the detriment of the tenant, but there had been a very strong feeling in the minds of the tenants that the presence of these words might give rise to injustice in certain cases. When that impression had been created it seemed injudicious to reintroduce them.

Mr. ELLIS GRIFFITH (Anglesey) said that the House by a large majority had decided against these words, and he thought the small party in this House in favour of them were not justified in using their influence in another place to have the words replaced in the Bill. More than that, there was an element of threat in the expression of the Attorney General that they must accept this Amendment or lose the Bill. He protested against that attitude of the Attorney General, more especially because this Amendment might have come down from the Lords many days ago instead of on practically the last day of the session. He thought that, both in substance and because of the method by which it had been introduced, the Amendment ought to be rejected.

Lords Amendment—

"In page 4, line 22, to leave out 'twenty-ive, twenty-six, and twenty-seven,' and insert twenty-three, twenty-four, and twenty-five' " ead a second time.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said Amendment."

*MR. CHANNING rose on a point of order to draw attention to the fact that this Amendment was consequential upon two others which appeared lower down on the Paper. He wished to ask whether the passing of the Amendment would preclude any discussion upon the subsequent Amendments, and whether it would be possible in event of its so doing to postpone it until those Amendments which related to the schedule were disposed of.

MR. SPEAKER: I do not quite follow the hon. Member.

*MR. CHANNING said there were Amendments upon the Paper lower down which, if agreed to, made this Amendment necessary. If it were now put from the Chair, would it not prevent the reinsertion of the items in Part 2 of the schedule which the Lords had struck out?

MR. SPEAKER: Does the hon. Gentleman suggest that if these numbers, 25, 26, and 27, were struck out it would be impossible to go back to alter something in Nos. 18 and 19?

*MR. CHANNING: I confess I do not quite understand the way in which you put it.

MR. SPEAKER: I understand the present Amendment is an amendment to Nos. 25, 26, and 27—marling of land, application to land of purchased artificial or other purchased manure, etc. Is all that to be struck out?

*MR. CHANNING: Oh, no, Sir.

MR. SPEAKER: Then I confess I do not follow the hon. Member.

MR. ASQUITH said on the point of order raised by the hon. Member for East Northamptonshire he might be permitted to explain the matter as it appeared to him. The Amendment was really consequential upon the alterations made in the Bill by the House of Lords in the schedule. If the Amendment were passed before the schedule were dealt with, it might apply to numbers which the House of Lords and this House did not intend that it should apply to.

MR. SPEAKER: In that case it might be convenient that it should be postponed.

The consideration of the Lords Amendment was postponed.

The next Amendment, page 5, line 9, agreed to.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said Amendment."

*MR. CHANNING said that the leaving out of those words would have the result of still compelling the farmer to obtain the consent of his landlord to plant osiers, whatever the area. Compensation would only be paid subject to the consent of the landlord being obtained. The small concessions made by the Bill appeared to him to be whittled away by this Amendment of the Lords, and he hoped the Government would resist it, having regard to the fact that the provision as originally drawn had been supported by a large majority of the House.

SIR ROBERT FINLAY hoped that the House would agree with the Lords Amendment. He was informed by those who had more knowledge of this subject than he had that this was not a matter of very great importance. There were two considerations which governed this question. First, wherever an improvement was undertaken in reasonable circumstances there could be no ground to suppose that the landlord would refuse his consent. As the effect of converting an acre of land into a garden was to improve the land, he thought that most landlords, acting reasonably, would give their consent if the tenant desired to carry out an improvement of the kind. There might, of course, be a percentage of cases in which the consent would be unreasonably refused; but should the House, for the sake of dealing with a comparatively small percentage of cases, imperil the passage of the Bill, to which all parties attached some importance?

Lords Amendment, in page 6, line 10 (leave out "exceeding one acre"), read a second time.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said Amendment."

MR. BRYNMOR JONES (Swansea District) said that with regard to the small holders of land in Wales the question whether they were to be able to make gardens after simply giving notice instead of obtaining the consent of the landlord was one of the utmost importance. He did not think the Attorney General grasped the importance of this matter. It did not affect those whose holdings were large, or where agricultural operations were carried on, but it was a matter of the greatest importance to people occupying small holdings in the mountainous parts of the country. The right hon. Gentleman had said that if it was to the benefit of the holding no landlord would withhold his consent. Such a statement showed a want of practical acquaintance with the way in which these small holdings were carried on. On small holdings in mountainous districts it often happened that a small piece of land from its soil and aspect was well adapted for growing produce for which the tenant from local circumstances could find a market, and such cultivation would be an advantage to himself and the holding. It was a simple matter, but would become impossible if the landlord's assent with conditions were required. He had in mind a large estate in Wales divided into 771 holdings, some as small as five acres, and remote from the estate office. A long correspondence and formal preliminaries would be ridiculous in relation to a garden plot.

SIR ROBERT FINLAY could not conceive that a landlord would impose unreasonable conditions, having regard to the character of the holding, or that, except in very exceptional circumstances, any hardship to the tenant would arise from having to obtain the owners' assent.

CAPTAIN SINCLAIR (Forfarshire) asked why these considerations were not regarded when the Bill was framed. The Bill contained this provision when it was originally introduced. It was founded on the recommendation of the Central and other Chambers of Agriculture, and the Government deliberately introduced it after some discussion, and the pros and cons must have been considered before it was introduced. Although the Government had supported it, and resisted the Amendments of hon. Members on the Ministerial side of the House, yet it was now proposed to accept the Lords Amendment. Why did not the Government in this matter stand to their guns, and hold to an Amendment which was of great importance to those concerned? It was one of the very small improvements upon preceding legislation, and it was greatly to be regretted that the Government did not show a greater disregard to the landlord interest in these matters. There was no justification for the disgraceful surrender of which they had been guilty.

COLONEL LOCKWOOD (Essex, Epping): I much regret the Lords Amendments made in this Bill. I believe this Amendment will not, in the main, cause many hardships among tenants. It is mainly a sentimental grievance. I regret the action of the House of Lords, but though dissenting from the Amendments made by that House, I will vote for the Government. I quite foresee that if we were to beat the Government in this matter, which we are not likely to do, the Bill would be lost.

*MR. CHANNING: The reply of the Attorney General, so far as I understood it, was that the landlords have so good a way of attending to their own interest that they are perfectly certain to grant permission for the laying out of a garden. But I must protest against this Amendment as really almost an insane assertion of caste domination in this matter. [Laughter.] Let anyone who laughs at this just go down to the Vale of Evesham and see for himself what enormous contributions have been made to the wealth of the owners of land by the energy and outlay of the market gardeners planting gardens at their own risk. It seems to me that the doctrine embodied in the Amendment is one of the most extraordinary economic follies I have ever seen.

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH: We are told that the matter is not to be discussed on the merits. We are told that we must agree with the Lords Amendments or we will not get the Bill at all. I do not think that is a right position for the House of Commons to be put in. It is not against reasonable landlords that this Bill is directed. It is against unreasonable landlords. If all landlords were reasonable we should not require a Bill of this kind directed against them. This House represents landlords quite enough. The House of Lords is a House of landlords pure and simple. I think we have a right to protest against the way the House of Commons and the Government have been overruled in the matter.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: May I say a few words in defence of Her Majesty's Government. Her Majesty's Government are showing that they are accessible to reason and capable of repentance. I think, further, that the Attorney General has proved that he never appears to greater advantage than when he is answering his own speeches. This Bill has multiplied the rights of action and the causes of quarrel between tenant and landlord too much. This Amendment will remove one right of action and cause of quarrel. It is a mistake to multiply by statute the conditions of disagreement. It is a far better way to leave tenant and landlord to themselves so far as you possibly can. The hon. Member opposite says this is only for the wicked landlords. That is the argument that is always used. I believe there are few landlords so wicked as to prevent a tenant from making such an improvement as this, which would be a permanent improvement to his own land. The assumption of hon. Members is that all wicked landlords would prevent this improvement. I support every word of this Amendment, not on metaphysical grounds, but on the ground of keeping alive friendship between landlord and tenant, and the system of give and take. The more you leave them to themselves, and the less you put them in the chains of the words of the statute, the better prospect you have of a satisfactory feeling subsisting between them.

Lords Amendment, in page 6, line 17 (leave out "exceeding one acre"), read a second time.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said Amendment."

MR. SOAMES (Norfolk, S.) reminded the House that this was one of the recommendations of the Central Chamber of Agriculture. He could not, for the life of him, see that the landlord's property or rights were likely to be interfered with to any great degree by this provision. He trusted that the Government would see their way to go to the House of Lords once more with the proposal.

CAPTAIN SINCLAIR said the only inference they could draw was that there must be considerable sympathy on the part of the Government and their supporters with the action of the House of Lords in this matter. This was a matter of considerable importance to a number of small individuals. He could testify from his own knowledge that it was an interesting question in the agricultural constituencies in Scotland.

COMPANIES BILL.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Lords Amendments be now considered."

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL moved that the Lords Amendments be considered that day three months. He did not want to trouble their Lordships to consider the Bill any further. They had been considering the Bill for five years. A promise was made by this Government when it came into power, in 1895, that there should be a drastic amendment of the Companies Acts. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, speaking in January, 1896, stated that fraud had become rampant and that he was sorry there was very great difficulty——

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member can only discuss this Bill from the point of view of the Amendments by the Lords. He cannot discuss the general principle of the Bill, or those parts of it that both Houses are agreed on.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL said he had that in view. The Companies Bill had been mentioned in every Queen's Speech since the present Ministry came into power. Many of the Amendments which had been introduced in the House of Lords were Amendments which had been cut out in the House of Commons before. These Amendments were introduced at a time when it was practically impossible to disagree with them without destroying the Bill. The Government had treated the House very badly in this matter, as the Bill, although the first promised in the Queen's Speech, was not introduced until late in the session, with the result that they now had to accept an emasculated measure.

Amendment proposed—

"To leave out the word 'now,' and at the end of the Question to add the words 'upon this day three months.' "—(Mr. MacNeill.)

Main Question put, and agreed to.

Lords Amendments considered.

Lords Amendment, in page 6, line 18 (leave out from "any," to the first "and" in line 20), read a second time.

Question proposed, "That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said Amendment."

MR. LAWSON WALTON (Leeds, S.) said that this Amendment raised a point of some little importance. The clause was inserted in Committee to meet the case of a company some portion of the capital and control of which was in the hands of persons holding founders' and management shares. The object of the clause was to ensure that the prospectus would bring to the attention of the intending subscriber information as to the extent of the control over the company's business, and as to the extent of the interest in the company's property and profits possessed by the holders of these founders' shares. The Lords had allowed the provision relating to the latter point to remain, but for some inexplicable reason they had deleted that portion of the clause relating to the extent of the control. Therefore, while the less important element survived, the more important was struck out; but he did not think the Lords would have done that if they had known the arguments by which the provision was supported. The task imposed upon directors by the clause was not a very heavy one, as the section would be entirely complied with by saying the number of founders' shares was 100 or 150, the holders of which were entitled to nominate three members of the board, and to divide the profits after the payment of 6 per cent. He hoped the Government would disagree with this Amendment.

SIR ROBERT FINLAY hoped the hon. and learned Member would not take a course which, if successful, at the present period of the session, might have the result of endangering the passage of the Bill. Reference had been made to the fact that holders of founders' shares very often received quite an exceptional proportion of the profits of a company. That, however, was provided for by the Bill as it stood, because the prospectus had to state the nature and extent of the interest of holders of founders' shares in the property and profit of a company. The reason for striking out the other portion of the clause was simply that it was not desirable to overload the prospectus with too many particulars. He referred the hon. and learned Member, who had said it was not necessary to state in detail the nature of the control, to the words of the clause which specified that a prospectus was to supply particulars of the control exercised by such holders. It was easy to say that the power of nominating three directors could be stated in a line, but very often there was considerable detail as to the nature of the control which the holders of these shares had over a company, and to set out all that detail might require a very lengthy paragraph. Moreover, the information as to control could be obtained by a reference to the Articles of Association. He therefore hoped the Lords Amendment would be agreed to.

MR. BRYNMOR JONES thought the argument that the Bill might be lost was not one which should be addressed to those who had been critics of the measure. The Government were responsible for not introducing the Bill earlier, and there certainly had been no disposition on the part of the Opposition to delay its passage. The substance of the reply of the Attorney General with regard to this particular Amendment was simply that the prospectus might be lengthened if this information was required to be given. He, however, was not appalled by that prospect. The subsidiary clauses in the agreements between the promoters of a company and the persons taking founders' or management shares were the very things the supporters of this clause desired to strike at. It was not sufficient for the intending subscriber to know the nature and extent of the interest of such holders in the property and profit of a company. That information could be obtained in many ways. The public desired to know what were the secret bargains that were being made, so that they might not be induced to subscribe for shares on a prospectus that concealed agreements between the promoters of a company and the holders of management or founders' shares, which might be of vital importance to the successful carrying on of the undertaking. The clause would be an infinitely better one if the words struck out by the Lords were retained, and he hoped the Amendment would be disagreed with.

Order for Second Reading read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read a second time."

*MR. CHANNING: I wish to say a few words on the settlement of the South African War. I offer no apology for attempting to deal briefly with this subject, because this is the last occasion on which we shall be privileged this session to offer any observations upon perhaps the gravest and most important issues this country has ever had to face. And I do not think that any apology is needed for a Member of this House coming forward, as I wish to do, in the capacity of a peace-maker. I listened with the greatest interest to the speech of my hon. friend the Member for Durham the other day, the admirable spirit and broad statesmanship of which I do not think could be praised too highly. In that short but significant speech the hon. Member rather complained that on this side of the House there had been no suggestions as to the future, nor as to the conduct of these affairs to a definite issue. I wish in what I am going to say to lead up to some practical and useful suggestions for the settlement of this tremendous problem. The Colonial Secretary said the other day that it added very much to the force of the contentions of those who wished leniency to be shown to the two Republics and to the rebels in the Cape if they believed that this war was an unjust and an unnecessary war. I do not wish to enter upon that topic now, because it would be trespassing unfairly upon the time of the House. I dealt with that aspect of the case very fully on the Amendment to the Address, and all I have to say about it now is that it seems to me that all the arguments, the contentions, and the evidence brought to light since the debate on the Address on the Amendment of the noble Lord the Member for Cricklade have tended only to deepen my conviction that this war was an unnecessary and an unjust war. I will not now labour that contention, nor do I wish to make any attack upon the Colonial Secretary. I think that the issues which are before the House at such a moment as this are beyond any personal issues. History will have to answer many questions as to the right hon. Gentleman and his connection with these affairs; history may solve the problem why it is that the right hon. Gentleman has preferred, in dealing with men and with nations, rather to make enemies than to make friends; history will decide what contribution the right hon. Gentleman may have made towards that hatred and suspicion of England among peoples abroad which has roused such lively alarm in the minds of great experts in foreign policy like Lord Salisbury and Lord Rosebery; and history will have to solve the problem whether that greatest and most disinterested of British statesmen, William Pitt—who forms the noblest picture, perhaps, in national history—won more glory by fighting the battles of the nationalities of Europe against the Imperialism of Napoleon than the right hon. Gentleman has gained by suppressing the liberties of two petty republics whose liberty we have again and again pledged ourselves to preserve. What I wish to deal with are practical, simple, and direct issues. It seems to me that there can be no work more noble in its character than to make suggestions which will tend to remove some of the bitter horrors of this war, and ameliorate the condition of chaos which we see in South Africa to-day, and which will tend to produce friendship and good will between two races which will have to live side by side in the future. What I have to bring before the House is whether John Bright and Ireland have taught us the true lesson that force is no remedy, or whether we are to accept the modern theory that the only way of obtaining a willing acquiescence in our rule—which is the aim of this policy, if it has any aim whatever—is to crush out the individuality of men and peoples, and to dictate without conferring or listening to their views, or claims, or protests, and to force upon them our own scheme of government whether they like it or not. We have already seen some of the results of this policy. The reply of Lord Salisbury to the telegram of the President of the Orange Free State and the President of the Transvaal Republics when Bloemfontein was captured seemed to me at the time a reply which menaced a prolongation—an embittered prolongation—of this war. I venture to say that it would have been better if, without accepting the terms suggested in the telegrams of the two Presidents—which, of course, were impossible terms—Lord Salisbury had shown that there was some hope of some of the ideas cherished by the Republics being accepted in some form or other by Her Majesty's Government. Then I come to the proclamation by Lord Roberts annexing the Orange Free State. What does that say? It says that it was expedient that the Orange Free State should be annexed, and should form part of Her Majesty's dominions. This proposal was not prefaced by any statement or any declaration stating the grounds for such annexation, and there was no communication with the Orange Free State, so far as I can trace, at all on the question. There was simply an absolutely autocratic statement that the Orange Free State should cease to exist, and that it was expedient that it should be annexed. [Ministerial cheers.] Hon. Members opposite cheer that statement, but is there any State document of a similar nature recorded in history which does not preface such annexation by a statement of the grounds on which such a policy is declared to be expedient? But will this policy of force be successful? Will the Transvaal and the Orange Free State be peaceful countries when you have completed this work of military ascendency. But your problem, as you put it yourselves, will be to assert the supremacy of a peaceful, industrial community of Englishmen, Germans, Frenchmen, and others over perhaps the fiercest, most determined, and most dexterous fighting community in history, as the Boers during this war have proved themselves to be. We know that before the war the Uitlanders were reluctant to become citizens of the Transvaal because they incurred military responsibilities, and they were equally reluctant to join in the agitation and the revolution planned by Mr. Rhodes, because their only desire was to be let alone to acquire wealth and bring it away with them to this country. Do you think that the prevailing spirit will not be exactly the same when you have restored order in the Transvaal? Do you think when the Uitlanders have returned to their occupations that they will not be just as reluctant to be turned into soldiers, against their habits and choice, and against their interests, as before? Do you think they will hold their own with such a warlike and enterprising race as the Boers? It is suggested that you may turn your soldiers from the colonies and elsewhere into settlers in South Africa, and some of them are to form a garrison to maintain British supremacy in the Transvaal. I should like any hon. Member who attaches any importance to that proposal to read the article written by Mr. Edward Dicey in one of the recently published reviews. If they know anything of the subject, they will know that it is practically impossible to make agriculture a paying industry for Englishmen in the Transvaal. It is an insoluble problem, the difficulties of which cannot be surmounted. You may spend money in planting those men there and equipping them, but the only result will be that in a very short time the men you have planted on the soil will drift into the towns and become hangers on at public-houses. [Ministerial cries of "Oh, oh!"] If they cannot carry on the agricultural industry successfully it is economically certain that they will drift into the towns and become waifs and strays. You have turned out all the Dutch railway men, and I think, if they committed no acts of war, that was a very questionable policy. You may create a few industries, and get employment for a few Englishmen in that way, and in that way your garrison might be strengthened; but is it possible under this régime of force and this idea of suppressing the vigour and vitality of a race which has been keeping England at bay for eleven months that any scheme of that kind without the presence of an enormous army from England will succeed in curbing the impatience of this resentful race, eager and capable of initiating at some time or other, probably when England may have her hands full with difficulties in other countries, a policy of revenge for what they consider the grave injustice to which they have been subjected. I believe there is only one cure for this state of things which is likely to bring about amicable relations between Englishmen and Dutchmen, and which will save England an enormous expenditure of life and treasure in dealing with this great problem, and that is to recognise frankly and fully the right of these people to maintain in some form or other that independence of which they are now being deprived. It may be an unpopular, and it certainly is an unfashionable, doctrine at this moment to support the policy of Mr. Gladstone in 1881. I am one of those who believe that that policy is the only true policy having its cornerstone in history and in human nature. But it was carried out under most unfortunate circumstances, and it would have been wiser if Mr. Gladstone had initiated his policy upon his advent to power in 1880. That would have been an intelligible and wise policy in 1880, whereas the moment when it was initiated was most unfortunate, and was surrounded by unhappy circumstances, which detracted from it. Yet, even so, it was not a failure, but had all but effected a complete pacification of South Africa. We have the testimony of many public men upon this point. Mr. Statham, one of the ablest recorders of South African contemporary history, said that this policy was

> "signally successful, as shown by the condition of South Africa in 1887, a year in which South Africa was nearer to political union through the action of natural forces than it has ever been before that date or since."

The House will probably recollect the very remarkable expression of opinion made by Lord Randolph Churchill, who visited South Africa in 1891, and who was at that time largely in sympathy with Mr. Rhodes and his policy. The view he expressed at that time was that, after studying the question, he had come to the conclusion that a mistake had been made in considering that this policy was a wrong policy, and he said—

> "So far from being an impolitic surrender, it had by its wisdom soothed the exasperation of Dutch sentiment at the Cape, and had made a real concord between the Dutch and English races possible."

In venturing to make suggestions from a practical point of view, I wish to do so without offence or irritation to those who take the opposite view of this question. I do not for a moment assert that we can reinstate the same state of things as existed before. That is absolutely impossible, but I do say that we ought to recognise what causes had stood in the way from 1887 to 1889 of the carrying out to successful fruition of Mr. Gladstone's policy, and that the same cases are now still standing in the way, and are preventing us from arriving at the sort of solution which Mr. Gladstone contemplated. What was standing in the way then, as now, is that great conspiracy, of which Mr. Rhodes is the head, to capture the gold mines of the South African Republic and turn the whole place into a gigantic monopoly out of which enormous wealth may be secured for a limited few at the risk of imperilling the happiness and well-being of the many. Having regard to the fact that English tradition points to the preservation of the rights of individuals to private property, I do not suppose that the private property of the Dutch in the Transvaal will be interfered with. You will, therefore, have much the same class of people coming to the front and taking part in the future life of the Transvaal. You will have the same leading Englishmen and Dutchmen gradually resuming their places. In the presence of such conflicting interests and sentiments, why on earth cannot we take this course instead of entrusting the settlement of this difficult question to the one man who has created the maximum of irritation and difficulty in the Transvaal and Orange Free State—Sir Alfred Milner? Why cannot we adopt the wiser policy, which is suggested not by myself but by that eloquent man whose loss we feel so much in this House, Sir Edward Clarke, who said that it would be wiser if some broad-minded and patriotic men were sent out to solve and settle and determine these tremendous issues and bitter controversies in South Africa in a generous spirit, and so arrive at a solution which would bring Dutchmen and Englishmen into harmony in the future? That is the solution for the immediate future of the Transvaal which I venture to suggest. What, again, is the issue between the Government and the wiser leaders in Cape Colony, between the Colonial Secretary and Mr. Schreiner, who has so admirably and so temperately represented the composite and conflicting interests there? Mr. Schreiner has made a suggestion to Her Majesty's Government that the same policy should be adopted in dealing with these dangerous and perilous issues in Cape Colony which Lord Durham so wisely adopted years ago in Canada. On the other hand you have this policy of refusing to listen to any of the demands of the Dutch people and of laying down the principle of lifelong disfranchisement and universal punishment. We know very well that the lifelong disfranchisement advocated by the right hon. Gentleman—which he said was not a punishment too severe to apply to the Cape rebels—has been practically overruled by the Ministry which has succeeded Mr. Schreiner's Ministry. What was really the suggestion which the Cape Ministry laid before Her Majesty's Government? It was that they should adopt Lord Durham's policy. Lord Durham in Canada was face to face with a similar exasperation of one race against another, and face to face with the same vehement denunciation of anything like clemency for the beaten French majority. And what was his decision? His decision was absolute pardon and amnesty for all but a few. Even those individuals who were sent out of Canada at that time were able to return within three or four years, and were actually elected to the first Dominion Parliament after the Union Act of 1840. Lord Durham as keenly appreciated the necessity of securing the ascendency of the British race and of British policy in Canada, as the right hon. Gentleman or Sir Alfred Milner does in the case of South Africa, but Lord Durham absolutely refused to secure the supremacy of the British race by tactics or proposals which would be liable to be represented as an electoral fraud, depriving the people whose fate he was determining of the right to share in the government of their country. He looked to the influence of perfectly equal and popular institutions in effacing distinctions of race and removing disorder and oppression. That is also the suggestion from Cape Colony to the British Government, and it seems that it is to be practically pushed aside. I may, perhaps, be treading on dangerous ground in even alluding to measures which are now actually under discussion in the Cape Parliament. I would be the last man to say a word which would be prejudicial to the interests of Cape Colony, but I ask whether it is not plain that the course of events is now being controlled from Downing Street, and on that ground only I venture to lay before the House of Commons some considerations as to the policy we should adopt in South Africa with regard to the Cape rebels, and that that policy should be the policy of Lord Durham instead of the policy laid down in the last Blue-book. One of the strongest arguments advanced by the Schreiner Ministry in the Minute they laid before Her Majesty's Government was that it was undesirable to punish wholesale, as the universality of such a punishment would rob it of its deterrent effect by converting a grave sentence of the law into a measure of political vengeance. That is an argument of enormous strength which should receive the fullest consideration of the Government. Mr. Winston Churchill, who seems to have inherited the keenness of insight and the courage of his brilliant father, in dealing with this question, advocated a generous and forgiving policy to these unfortunate men, who, he said, were only traitors in the legal sense, and had obeyed a natural instinct in joining men of their own blood. [HON. MEMBERS: Oh!] I am quoting Mr. Winston Churchill, who, I believe, is a not undistinguished member of the party opposite, and I venture to think that the breadth and generosity he has shown in the letters he has written about the war will stand to his credit, no matter to which party he may pledge himself in future. I would wish to press this further point. There are more than 450,000 Dutchmen in Cape Colony, but it is only alleged in the Blue-book that 10,000 of these men have been traitors, some of them in the comparatively venial sense described by Mr. Winston Churchill. We have now to consider this fact. Owing to the wisdom of Mr. Schreiner and many other leaders of that side of politics in the Cape we have the vast mass of the Dutch in Cape Colony standing loyal to this country and absolutely abstaining from joining in the war. That is a tremendous fact, especially when it is remembered that the universal opinion among the Dutch in South Africa is that the war was unjust and unnecessary, and that though begun on the pretext of franchise, it was really directed towards the extinction of the independence of the two Dutch Republics. Are we to offer no reward or show any consideration to the vast number of loyal Dutchmen in South Africa who have remained loyal to this country? Would it not be a wiser policy to reward their loyalty by a generous policy and not by a policy of wholesale disfranchisement? A policy of this kind is not a policy of punishment, as was pointed out by my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition the other day. It is rather a policy of political proscription, and the result can only be the creation of a new race of real Dutch helots in South Africa, when the war was started on the sham plea of rescuing British helots. The raid is fresh in the minds of many hon. Members. What happened then in regard to the rebels who rebelled against the perfectly lawful authority of the Transvaal Government, and who were just as much rebels as are the Cape Dutch to-day? I remember the Colonial Secretary praising the magnanimity of President Kruger in refraining from punishing those men with the extremity that he was by the laws of the Transvaal and by International law fully and absolutely entitled to use against them. The right hon. Gentleman now mocks at the idea of allowing red-handed rebels in Cape Colony to enjoy the franchise any longer or to share in the government of the country. But what did he do then? Within a few weeks of President Kruger amnestying these men the right hon. Gentleman recommended a series of reforms, one of the very first proposed of which was the extension of the franchise within the Transvaal to the very men who had acted as red-handed rebels, and had revolted against the perfectly lawful authority of the Transvaal Government. That seems to me to be a salient illustration of the unreason of this policy. In working this noble instrument—the British Empire—which ought to be used for the advancement of human happiness, human freedom, and human welfare throughout the world, we should remember the simple doctrine, "Do unto others as we would they should do unto us," and that every other race has an equal right to live and enjoy the full benefits of being upon this earth. If we deal with all races and all questions in that spirit I venture to say we shall not have so often displayed the bitter animosity against this country which now prevails, and that we shall have more often words like the noble words Kossuth uttered at Southampton, when welcomed back in 1851, after the glorious struggle that he made for the liberty of Hungary. Kossuth then said he had learned to look always on England as the Book of Life that taught the nations how to live. Are we now to make England, at the end of the nineteenth century, the Book of Death to individual and national liberties, and a bye-word among the nations for suppressing a spirit which, after all, is worthy of admiration and respect? I do not know whether any words of mine will have the least weight with this House or with Her Majesty's Government, but I have tried, so far as in me lies and without offence, to lay before the House what seemed to me to be some reasons for adopting a more generous policy towards these people than that which has been put forward, not forgetting the wrongs they may have done, but striving to remember this fundamental truth, that the best way of curing these evils is by elevating, not by crushing, the human race. I venture to say that if we turn to the lessons of the last century, looking first to the policy of Lord North, and, forty years later, to the noble results of the wiser and more generous policy of Lord Durham, we should remember in dealing with these Cape rebels the lessons of Lord Durham, and deal with the grave difficulties in the Transvaal in the manner indicated in the weighty and wise words uttered at the commencement of this session by Sir Edward Clarke.

Attention called to the fact that forty Members were not present (Dr. TANNER, Cork County, Mid). House counted, and forty Members being found present,

*SIR J. COLOMB (Great Yarmouth): I do not intend to follow the hon. Member who last spoke, in his remarks upon the situation in South Africa, or to say anything that could have been said during the session on any Vote of Supply or in any debate that has taken place. I wish to take the only opportunity of the session to say a few words on the general question of Imperial defence. The procedure of this House is such that this is a question absolutely precluded from being considered as a whole during the session, and it is only on the Appropriation Bill that you can look at it in its main aspects. When the Army Estimates are before the House we pretend that protection against invasion and the defence of the colonies is not a purely Naval question; and when the Navy Estimates are under consideration we are obliged to pretend that no Army exists. Therefore we are precluded from dealing with the broad principles of British defence. What I chiefly want to touch upon is the fact that while the procedure of this House debars discussion on the general principles of defence, there is no Minister and no Department of the State that is responsible for dealing with British defence as a whole. The defence of the Empire is worked in several water-tight compartments. The Army is worked on one line, the Navy on another, the defence of the colonies is carried on on independent lines, while there are several armies under the Foreign and Colonial Offices. In addition to that there are military forces in all the self-governing colonies which can never be touched upon or discussed in the House, except in separate Votes. It is true that we have a Defence Committee of the Cabinet, but that Defence Committee cannot be regarded as responsible to this House for its acts, and its policy—if it has one—can never be discussed here because its members receive no salary as a Defence Committee, and we can never challenge their action. That is the excuse for my troubling the House at the present moment. The most remarkable character about the Appropriation Bill, if you take it over a series of years, is the prodigious growth of the expenditure of the United Kingdom for the protection of the whole Empire; and that is becoming more emphasised and more marked every year. This year, of course, it is abnormal on account of the war, but I am taking the normal expenditure, and the fact was recently dwelt upon with great lucidity by the hon. Member for Dundee. That being so, another question suggests itself, namely, that while this enormous expenditure of the United Kingdom is growing, the trade and revenue of the United Kingdom is not increasing in any corresponding degree. That is a remarkable fact, and justifies my drawing attention to it on the Appropriation Bill. But when I turn to the outside Empire I find a different state of things prevailing. There is no such increase of expenditure in behalf of the protection of the Empire, but there is an enormous increase in its trade and revenue. I do not want to weary the House with figures, and I will merely deal with the self-governing colonies during the last thirty years. During that period the expenditure of the United Kingdom on the Navy for the protection of all the interests of the trade of the British Empire has more than tripled, while the increase of the sea trade of the United Kingdom has not been more than 50 per cent. But during the same period the aggregate sea trade of the self-governing colonies—wholly independent of that of the mother country—has increased by 133 per cent. And be it noted that the sea trade of the self-governing colonies, independent altogether of any interchange with the United Kingdom, is now many millions in excess of the whole sea trade of the Empire of Russia. In the same period of thirty years the increase of revenue of the mother country has not been more than 50 per cent., while the aggregate revenue of the self-governing colonies has more than quadrupled. In fact, the aggregate revenue of the self-governing colonies now is half the entire revenue of the United States of America. Take another point—the dominion of the sea. The protection of sea trade is as vital and necessary to any single part of the Empire abroad as to the United Kingdom. That will not be denied by any colonial citizen. Let me point out how the burden of the protection of this sea trade is borne. Twenty-eight per cent. of the revenue of the United Kingdom is spent on the Navy for the protection of the Empire's trade; and only ·3 or 3-10ths per cent. of the revenue of the whole outlying Empire goes as a contribution to the Navy for the protection of the sea trade of the Empire. In another form, out of every £100 of revenue raised in the United Kingdom, £28 is spent on the Navy; while out of every £100 of the aggregate revenue of the outlying Empire, 6s. per cent. only is paid as a contribution for the protection of its sea trade by the Navy. In other words, the United Kingdom bears a proportion of ninety-three times more of the Navy expenditure than the outlying Empire. I think anyone who has studied this question for some years must be forced to admit that this state of things cannot continue. The point is to find a remedy. We must sooner or later, and I think sooner than later, face this question, difficult and delicate though it be, of the distribution of the burden of empire throughout the Empire. One day you have a naval fever and spend everything for the Navy, and another day you have a military fever, and spend recklessly for the Army. I trust it will be distinctly understood that I am not suggesting that this Empire can be run on the cheap; there must be an enormous expenditure, but I do question whether we get value for our money. The question which I wish to bring to the attention of the House is the contribution to the expense of protecting the Empire. It is a matter which we must take notice of, and cannot avoid taking notice of, and under these circumstances, I think, instead of dealing with the question in bits, as at present, we should have a bigger policy of settled co-operation, and an organised system to provide for British security throughout the world. We can only approach this question in mutual confidence between our self-governing colonies and ourselves. The time has long gone by for anything like dictation on our part, and what we have to do is to take the colonies more into our confidence, and I think the time is opportune for calling a conference for considering the matter. The war has brought this thing to a head. It has given a most conclusive proof that all parts of the Empire mean to stand or fall together. It has established beyond doubt in the face of the world the solidarity of British sentiment and the craving for British union. It has shown that the will of the colonies has outstripped the will of the Ministers at home. It was not a question of the machinery of Government and the suggestion of Ministers, but of spontaneous rush and desire on the part of colonial peoples, that produced the forces from all parts of the Empire for service in South Africa. That broke down all the political theory upon which the government was formed for the colonies. The whole of the constitutions of our colonies only recognised passive defence as the extreme possibility. All that laws recognised was that the forces raised in the colonies were to be used and used only for the defence of their particular territory, but, in the circumstances of the war, a larger view was taken, and the education derived from the war has brought home to the sons of the Empire all over the world the fact that they must look beyond their territory, and can only live in real safety by sharing the common burdens of Empire. They have shed their blood and treasure for the cause of union. They have voluntarily and spontaneously in this war taken upon themselves the burden of Empire, and they have proved their title to more confidence being placed in them, and to be taken more into real partnership with the mother country.

That being so, I appeal to the Government to consider whether, under the circumstances to which I have referred, and when the war is finished, the time has not arrived for looking ahead and looking to the future policy; whether it is not time for the Government to consider the advisability of inviting the colonies to take part in a conference to consider the position. It is said that any suggestions as to holding a conference must come from the colonies. That is an arguable question, which I will not weary the House by entering into, but I must observe in passing that it is only the Imperial Government which knows the dangers that confront our Empire, and knows the real difficulties and strain in which the Empire would be involved in case of war. It is only the Imperial Government which can place before the colonies the whole position of the difficulties and dangers we all have to meet; and to refuse to take action and to shuffle off responsibility by saying they will not ask for a conference, but wait for the colonies to do so, is a shirking of responsibility by the Ministers of this country. No one would propose that the colonies should contribute without giving them some voice in the matter. The question cannot be solved in an abstract way if there is to be absolute combination, as there must be if the Empire is to be safe. There must be an arrangement for bearing the burdens which the defence of the Empire involves. In some shape or form all parts of the Empire should have a voice. The Government thinks the suggestion for a conference must come from the colonies. Now, a remarkable step has been taken by New Zealand. If it is not a hint I do not know what a hint is. The proposal of Mr. Seddon, the Premier of New Zealand, is, briefly, that Australasia shall raise a force of 50,000 men available under certain conditions for service in all parts of the Empire. The general outline of the proposal puts the expenditure at £1,000,000 a year, and Mr. Seddon proposes that the expense shall be shared equally upon the basis of population or some other basis between the mother country and the colonies; the equipment and munitions of war required shall be provided by the mother country, the colonies to pay 3 per cent. upon the capital charge; and that a sinking fund shall be formed from the difference at which colonial borrowings can be made and the amount at which Imperial loans can be raised. He also proposes that a branch of Naval Reserve and Volunteers shall be drilled on the cruisers on the Australian stations, and he advocates the strengthening of the Australian Squadron, and he concludes by asking that a conference shall be held in the colonies, which shall be presided over by Lord Roberts, if he can be spared, and if not, by some general who has served in South Africa. In that suggestion there is a very broad hint as to what New Zealand and the Australian colonies think about joining hands with us. The necessity of an Imperial conference is shown by the fact that the Navy is thus treated as a sort of supplementary scheme; but the Navy is the paramount necessity of the Empire, and before we begin to raise the military machinery we have to be quite certain that our naval machinery is sufficient for our needs. That shows the necessity for a conference between the self-governing colonies and the Imperial Government, so that the main principles of Imperial defence should be thoroughly understood, and each point dealt with in its own order in the regular way. I hope, therefore, the House will pardon me, upon the Appropriation Bill, drawing attention to a question which grows in importance every day, and which must be faced. How are we going in future to preserve the safety of the Empire without some arrangement by which all parts of the Empire shall participate? I thank the House for having listened to me so patiently, and I should not have troubled hon. Members with these observations if I had not thought there was very great need for a redistribution of the Imperial burdens.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee) said the hon. and gallant Gentleman had made an instructive and courageous, and at the same time a very temperate speech. The hon. and gallant Gentleman complained that while the defence of the Empire was entrusted to a Committee of the Cabinet, the policy of the Committee could not be discussed in the House because it was not represented in the House as a Committee. But that Committee directed the heads of the Army and the Navy, both of which were represented, and the single comment he had to make was that since the hon. and gallant Gentleman had been speaking no one representing either the War Office or the Admiralty had been present to listen to him. They must have known what was taking place through the usual channels, according to the principle of the Appropriation Bill, when all Ministers were supposed to be in attendance, seeing that every Department could be attacked. He was surprised that a speech by such an authority as the hon. and gallant Gentleman should have received no attention from the heads of the Departments directly concerned. The speech was a courageous one, because at this particular juncture, having regard to public opinion, it required courage upon the part of Conservative Members to expose to the people the system by which an unfair portion of the burden fell upon the United Kingdom. There were two points in the speech of the hon. and gallant Gentleman which he proposed to deal with with regard to the Navy. It could not be denied that the Navy was as available for the defence of the colonies as for the defence of the United Kingdom, and that our expenditure for the Navy in the present year was £30,000,000. Before many years passed, even if shipbuilding for the Navy was not increased, we must look forward to an automatic increase in expenditure, up to, say, £40,000,000. The points he wished to emphasise were that the whole of this expenditure was as much at the service of the colonies as ourselves, and the whole of it was borne by the people of the United Kingdom alone. He did not take into account the small sums paid for the maintenance of the Australian Squadron or the small amounts from Cape Colony or Natal, as in the true sense of contribution they were more in the nature of grants. Taking population as the basis of calculation, the proportion of the contribution towards thirty millions for the naval services common to the United Kingdom and the colonies should be three millions from the Australian group of colonies and three millions from the Canadian Dominion. He would by no means approach any of our self-governing colonies in any spirit of dictation, but surely we could trust their Imperial patriotism so far as to put the facts before them.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON (Cumberland, Cockermouth): I could not help thinking, whilst listening to the speeches which have just been delivered, what we have done, and in what position we have placed ourselves, which has made it necessary to have this enormous appropriation for self-defence. Hitherto we have got on very well, and there must have been something in our consciences to have led to this. I remember in the old days when the Second Reading of the Appropriation Bill used to be taken in a few minutes, the Leader of the Opposition, whoever he might be, would make an interesting speech, and the Leader of the House would explain his policy, if he had one. Now we are rather like sheep without a shepherd. The position reminds me of an incident in the Chino-Japanese war. A telegram giving an account of a battle, stated that just at the moment when the battle began a junk was seen proceeding along the coast bearing the Commander-in-Chief to a place of safety. Private Members under these circumstances must do what they can, and the important duty of a private Member is, I think, to discuss how the national money has been disposed of. We have now the most enormous revenue we have ever had, and the most enormous expenditure. I suppose some day the nation will ask us how this money has been expended and whether it has been expended for good purposes. For the moment, the Government may be called the steward of the national funds, and the question for us and the country is, have they laid out that money well and to good purpose? I do not think it has been laid out to good purpose. I do not think £70,000,000 gone for the slaughter of men of the same colour, the same creed, and the same race as ourselves, is a profitable expenditure of public money. When I say £70,000,000, that is what was quoted the other day, but I suppose nobody doubts that before the finish it will be £100,000,000 or more. We have sacrificed that money to a deity whom the Colonial Secretary calls the God of Battles—a deity constructed out of his own ingenuity, for whom I should have no respect at all. If it is a right and noble thing for us to appeal to the God of Battles and to kill all these people, I am always puzzled to know why the natives were not allowed to join in the enterprise. If it was noble, we ought to have invited them to assist. I have never heard any explanation why it was so wrong for natives to join and right for Europeans. I really think, looking at all that has been going on lately, that by this enormous expenditure, by this system of aggression, by this system of attack, by this system of filibustering, we have entered on a course of ruin. If we look back in history, we find that all great military empires have sooner or later collapsed. It appears to me that we are going the same road. I do not altogether blame the Government and the hon. Gentlemen who support them on the opposite side for this state of things. We have done bad things enough on the Liberal side. We have pandered to the military spirit. I look back only about twenty years to our Egyptian policy. We went and interfered with the Egyptians when they had a revolution in trying to reform their own finances. We invaded them, and there were perpetual battles and massacres for many years. Not satisfied with that, when hon. Gentlemen came into office on the other side they must go to the Soudan and out-do us, I suppose. There they had that glorious day when in the space of two or three hours 30,000 men were shot or wounded, and it was supposed that never in the history of the world had more men been killed in the same space of time. That delighted the whole of this Christian country. That rejoicing was joined in, I am sorry to say, by the leaders of the Opposition. Then after that we have this Chinese affair. I was interested in the description of the policy in China which the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave the other day. He described the policy in China as a plum cake policy. Everybody goes and cuts a slice. He does not seem to believe that the Chinese are human beings at all. Now we are meeting with the results of the filibustering policy, in which I do not say we are worse than other nations. All the European nations have been going on in that way. After all this Egyptian policy, Soudanese policy, and Chinese policy, we have this awful war in South Africa—a war which has now become one of crushing out two independent small Republics—a course of conduct which is as bad, in my opinion, as anything Austria ever did in Hungary, or Russia in Poland. Can anybody say that the results we have got are worth all the enormous sums of money we have spent and are spending? Can anybody tell me what human being is the better for this Transvaal war? Myriads are the worse for it. Thousands and thousands have died, and thousands of survivors are suffering torments worse than death from this dreadful policy. The answer to that would be—Well, we have vindicated our power. I suppose we have, but is that a great thing? Is that a glorious thing? Supposing that in a town or village one man was accounted obnoxious, and five men go and kick him to death, do you call that a noble act? In the old days it would have been called a very cowardly thing. In the old days it used to be said, hit a man of your own size. That has all gone now. It is considered the noblest and grandest thing to have sent out an army five times as large as that with which we have had to contend, and we have shown the greatest delight at triumphing over and defeating them with five to one. Why, what are we doing with these wretched people in South Africa? The whole world is filled with horror at the present moment at the conduct of the Boxers in China. What is their policy? To kill foreigners. Well, what is our policy in the Transvaal? To kill all Boers. [Cries of "No!"] Then what do you fight for? Is it not a policy of extermination? [Cries of "No!"] They are going on, and they are defending themselves. I suppose that as long as there is one man left you will fight him. Is not that a policy of extermination? The difference between that policy and the policy of the dreadful people in China is that they are resisting people going into their country, and we are going into another country and killing the inhabitants thereof. There seems to be no desire or attempt to stop this dreadful fighting. Day after day we look at our papers, and read the telegrams stating that so many men have been killed here and so many there, so many made prisoners here and so many there. We read with the greatest equanimity, and seem to think it is a delightful way of proceeding. We do not seem to care how long it goes on. I think that any Government that does not try by negotiation to cease this senseless slaughter is a Government deserving of the condemnation of all just and upright men. I said that this was probably the last time that we shall have an opportunity of discussing things in this way. I dare say it is the last time for many of us. Many here will not be seen again on these benches, and I very likely may be one of them. [Cries of "No!"] Oh, yes; they are not absolutely wise in the north of England. But, I say, that being the case, it is all the more important that any of us who has to make his last dying speech and confession should take care that it should be a true one. You may say that this is electioneering. There was a talk of that last week in the debate on the Supplemental War Loan Bill. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouthshire made a speech which the Chancellor of the Exchequer said was electioneering. I want to know what better thing anyone can do. Honest electioneering does nothing more than undertake to advise our fellow-countrymen what we believe to be right, true, honest, and just, and I do not know that any nobler thing can be done than electioneering in that manner, not for our own profit but for the profit of the nation. What can be said for the Government that has landed us in this awful state of things? Look at what they will say to the country if they speak the truth. They will say, "We have been in office five years, and as the result we have made a hell of South Africa. We have made a filibustering raid on the people of the country to accomplish that result. We have blotted out as far as we can from our policy the word magnanimity. We have made a jest and a laughing-stock of the word.' Magnanimity is nothing more than honour, truth, and justice, and according to the greatest authority in the House of Lords and elsewhere we have contrived to make an atmosphere of hatred regarding ourselves in almost all the countries in the world. I suppose the Government will say quite truly that they did not mean to bring all these evils about. Of course they did not; if they did they would be either lunatics or traitors; but does that exculpate them? Not entirely. A few weeks ago there was a man driving the engine of a London express train. He inadvertently failed to see that the signals were against him, and he ran his train into another standing at Slough. Four people were killed and many were injured. That man's life is blasted. He will never be trusted again. But what have we to say of the Government that has disregarded the signals of danger, disregarded all the warnings, and landed us in a miserable war costing thousands and thousands of lives? I, for one, would far rather be that unfortunate man who drove the engine at Slough than a member of this Government. The point is this. If this Government are maintained in power, if they vindicate all these aggressions they have made, what is before us? Nothing but an endless vista of future war. I know that it is expected that the nation will give its mandate again to this Government. All I can say is, if they do it, so much the worse for the nation. What is the meaning of our confederation together if we cannot oppose this? I say that peace is the very foundation stone of Liberal policy, and if Liberals do not proclaim that principle what are they? Mr. Disraeli long ago said that "a Tory Government was an organised hypocrisy." [An HON. MEMBER: Conservative.] I beg pardon, "a Conservative Government was an organised hypocrisy." I say that if the Liberal party go to the country and put aside their own doctrine of peace, they are nothing more than a disorganised hypocrisy. I speak for myself, and I do not know for how many more, but I know that I speak for a certain number when I say that they will maintain that policy. I say more. However black things may look now, with them is the future. You may call us pro-Boer, you may call us traitors. I remember the lines of Lowell—

> "Call us cowards, call us traitors,
> Just as suit your mean ideas;
> Here we stand as tyrant-haters,
> And the friends of God and peace."

I say here, before the General Election—because I am not ashamed to make an electioneering speech here or anywhere else—I say here in Parliament, as I shall say in the constituencies, that we will protest to the utmost of our power against the gospel of grab which for the last ten months has been preached in Parliament, in the pulpit, and in the press. We will do that, and we will remind our fellow-countrymen that while a great authority has said that "the greatest of British interests is peace," a still greater authority has declared that "it is righteousness alone that exalteth a nation."

*MR. BURDETT-COUTTS (Westminster): I am sorry to have to divert the attention of the House from subjects so important in themselves, and which have been rendered so interesting by the three speeches to which we have listened. If I may venture to say so, in regard to the speech of the hon. Member for Cockermouth, while saving the interest of my party, I would hope that the mournful anticipations he has indulged in with regard to himself will not be realised, and that he will return to this House to interest and amuse us with his familiar and genial presence. I feel bound to call the attention of the House at this late period of the session to the position in which the question of the sick and wounded in South Africa is left by the form of the inquiry that has been instituted. It seems to me extraordinary, and, I think, most unfortunate, that a subject in which the people of this country are so deeply interested—more interested, I think, than Her Majesty's Government seem to be aware of—should, in its later and most important phase, have been accorded no adequate opportunity of discussion in this House. It is not my fault if any criticism I may feel bound to offer was not made before in this House—was not made at a time when it might have led, as another criticism led, to an effective discussion. I took the only opportunity that was open to me, and that was through the public press to protest against certain features in the form of this inquiry. The Government, it is true, proceeded to make a change in the status of the Commission, but that change conferred on the Commission none of the powers essential to arriving at a proper conclusion. There has been no opportunity in this House of discussing the constitution of the Commission as a whole. There has been no opportunity of discussing its original constitution by the light of certain facts which were authoritatively denied from the Front Bench, and subsequently admitted. I do not propose myself to discuss the constitution of the Commission to-night, partly because I think it would be more respectful to a former ruling of yours, Sir, that I should not do so, and partly because I for my part have no desire, now the Commission has been constituted and has gone to work, to criticise its personal composition on this occasion. There is another question to which I wish to refer, which is far more important, and for which there has been no opportunity of discussion in this House, and that is the powers with which it goes forth. I propose to show that the Commission has been issued divested of all the powers essential to finding out the truth in this matter; and the great, permanent, humane and national interests involved in this inquiry will be imperilled, if not defeated, by the course that has been taken. The Committee, as it was originally called, has been turned into a Royal Commission. But in announcing that fact the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury stated that the change did not confer upon it either the power to take evidence on oath or power to compel the attendance of witnesses. Well, if that is so, the Committee goes forth with its hands tied behind its back, utterly powerless to push the investigation home. Moreover, it goes forth at the mercy of one side and of one interest in this inquiry, and that the side and interest most involved in its own exculpation. What is the exact position? I have never suggested that the whole blame for the state of things that has existed in South Africa devolved upon the Army Medical Department, but undoubtedly it is largely involved. The watchful and far-seeing energy of that Department in its own defence has become sufficiently notorious. It is not criticising the action of the Commission to say that I could give an instructive illustration of this from the curious selection of witnesses that has been presented to the Commission in this country. Is it to be supposed that this energy in its own defence will be relaxed as the trial goes on? The Commission has gone to South Africa. There nine-tenths of the evidence is under the control of that Department, or of some Department of the War Office; their hand reaches over the whole field of witnesses. Of course, they will organise the evidence and they will choose the witnesses. There is no organisation on the other side of the case. I myself can give the Commission very little assistance, for reasons I will make clear in a moment. On one side you have this powerful organisation; on the other you have absolutely nothing but the voluntary act of individuals, ninety-nine out of one hundred of whom believe, rightly or wrongly, that they will be prejudiced by coming forward. The right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury, when I brought this subject forward on a former occasion, referred me to "the very elaborate precautions which the Commission propose to take for the protection of witnesses," and he proceeded to add that he "doubted whether any statute would give a protection so absolute." What are those precautions? I confess I was amazed, when I read them, at the description the right hon. Gentleman gave. They are two. First, witnesses in Government offices will be freed from their obligation of secrecy with regard to official information. Surely that is an ironical precaution. What do witnesses in Government offices know about the sufferings of the sick and wounded in South Africa? And what sort of evidence are we to expect from offices which contain the very Departments which are on their trial in this matter? The second precaution is that the evidence of those who desire it will be taken in private and their names will not appear. This is no protection at all. [An HON. MEMBER: Why not?] I will tell you. With the Commission holding its sittings, as it will have to do henceforth, in localities where every individual is known, with half a dozen officials at the doors and half a dozen reporters inside, do you suppose you will persuade any man that his name will not leak through to that inner circle of authorities whom he fears. [An HON. MEMBER: No!] My hon. friend says no. Take the case of the private soldier. He will have to get leave of absence to attend before the Commission; his officers and non-commissioned officers will know all about him, and next morning they will not have the slightest difficulty in identifying his evidence and knowing what he said. But the second precaution is open to far graver objection. Do you suppose for one moment that the public mind, which is awake on this question, is going to be satisfied by even a partly secret inquiry, with any of its proceedings carried on in the dark, and any of the grounds of its conclusions wrapped in mystery? The Commissioners in their opening statement went on to say, and the right hon. Gentleman repeated it here——

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Member is now about to refer to the proceedings of the Commission itself——

MR. BURDETT-COUTTS: No, Sir.

MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member began by saying, "The Commissioners in their opening statement" said so-and-so.

MR. BURDETT-COUTTS: Yes, Sir.

MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member will be out of order in referring to the proceedings of the Commission.

MR. BURDETT-COUTTS: Then I will keep within your ruling, Sir, by confining myself to stating that the First Lord of the Treasury said in this House that if the Commissioners "are substantially hindered from ascertaining the facts by the absence of compulsory powers, they will not hesitate so to report to the Prime Minister and to ask his assistance in procuring the necessary powers." The right hon. Gentleman stated at the same time that the only means of giving them those powers was by Act of Parliament. But the Commission has gone to South Africa, and this Parliament is over. What is the Government going to do? Does it propose to wait till a new Parliament meets or another session opens, and then pass an Act of Parliament when all the most important part of the Commission's work is done? I am sorry to have to detain the House, but I do not on a question of this kind like to indulge in generalities, and it will make my point more clear if I give to the House certain instances which will show how little chance there is of the Commission getting at the truth in this matter. There are many classes of witnesses. In the first place, there are the officials engaged out there. I have here a letter from a responsible and important official out in South Africa, written some time before my article appeared in The Times, and entirely independent of it, giving an account, with long and exact details, of the confusion, incompetence, and mismanagement, which resulted in three general hospitals going up to the front, but with the staffs of two, the beds and equipment of one and the tents of another; and the red tape which prevented those three elements being combined for the use of the sick and wounded, who were lying and dying huddled together on the ground in the field hospitals. But at the end of his letter—and this is the point—he says—

> "I trust to you not to give me away by quoting my name. You know what the result would be to me."

Then there are the officers themselves. They may be young officers, but they are none the less watchful, and their testimony is none the less valuable on that account in regard to things they have seen. I will give two instances. The first is an officer who saw with his own eyes and described in detail the horrible sufferings of the wounded at Paardeberg owing to the almost entire absence of everything that was necessary. I thought he would come forward and tell his story; but after a couple of months he says—

> "I cannot give evidence; I am convinced it would prejudice my future career in the Army."

The second is an officer who was able to speak to at least three of the most important incidents to which I myself bore testimony in this House, and who saw many other things equally bad if not worse. I took down this officer's detailed statement in South Africa, and read it over to him. I hoped he would come forward, but he has returned to this country, he has gone into his club, and now he says—

> "I cannot come forward. I know what it would be. I want to get on in the Army. And then there is the regimental feeling. The fellows would say, 'What did you want to come forward for and make complaints?' and I should not be able to stay in the regiment."

Then there are the private soldiers themselves—the rank and file of the Army—whose fear of "the authorities" is traditional, and who look on any and every inquiry as a court-martial. From these I have had plenty of letters—I will not say "innumerable" letters—giving most important details, but all, with hardly an exception, begging that their names may not be mentioned, as they know the consequences. The Commission went down to Netley. ["Oh, oh."] It so happened that I had a correspondent at Netley, a relative of a respected Member of this House, and in every way trustworthy and reliable, who wrote to me giving detailed and very strong statements from several of the men there, and saying—

> "Had I been longer at Netley and set about it systematically I could have had plenty more statements, but directly the soldiers think anything they might say might come out nothing would induce them to speak, as they told me they would only get punished if they complain about anything. I am much afraid the Commission will do no good. If they were disguised as orderlies and lived the life for a few days they would find out the robberies and neglect and inhumanity in South Africa, but just going, perhaps well heralded, will be absolutely useless."

That is from a person who has been constantly for the last month in Netley amongst the patients there. But I do not see much similarity between the statements I have in my possession and the reports of the evidence taken at Netley which I read in the public press. Then there are the doctors or officers of the Army Medical Corps and the Army nurses, who have worked so strenuously, and many of whom have died, under conditions which were unfair and unjust and unnecessary, and to which they ought never to have been subjected, and who would be able to point out how many of those conditions might have been avoided. Apart from the fact that by a sustained misrepresentation my statements have been taken as an attack on the Royal Army Medical Corps, what is the position of the doctors? They depend for their advancement upon a private report of their superior officers. Do you suppose that they would be induced voluntarily to come forward and make complaints? Promotion in the commissioned ranks of the Army Medical Corps comes very largely by selection. Then there are the non-commissioned officers and orderlies of the same Corps. They too depend very largely upon selection by their superior officers; and I do not think I am urging anything unfair when I say that if you have to depend upon those men voluntarily coming forward to make complaints against their superior officers you will not get their evidence. Then there are classes of civilians who have been engaged in these military hospitals. There are the so-called Army Reserve Nurses—a very important class. From these I have many letters giving exact and startling details; but all of the writers with one single exception asked that their names might be suppressed lest they should not be chosen again for work which their bravery and devotion made them eager to obtain. Lastly, there is the most important class of all—the civilian doctors who have been engaged in military work. Most of these belong to that large floating element of the medical profession which very often, through no fault of their own, are without fixed employment, and who are looking to the continuance, in one form or another, of this employment under the Army Medical Department, upon which their livelihood depends. I have taken at random a letter from one of these doctors, written to a relative before my articles appeared in The Times, and quite independently of those disclosures, and he states—

> "I assure you that there is a great deal of nonsense being talked at home about the perfect arrangements made for the sick."

—this was written six weeks before my letter appeared in The Times—

> "The wounded do better, as there is a certain halo of romance about the thing which is not the case when a poor devil drops out on the march suffering from dysentery, pneumonia, or typhoid. People at home would not believe me if I told them that two days ago eighty sick men passed south through this station in open cattle trucks with no one in charge. They had been travelling by road and train for three days, and had had no food for thirty-six hours. Two of the men were dying."

The doctor's relative who sent me the letter says, "Of course, you will not give the name of the writer." I have other independent letters of the same kind written to relatives and also a large number written to me direct, containing much evidence which would be of the greatest possible use to the Commission, but in all cases the difficulty with regard to disclosing the name comes in. I must give one more case—amongst the civilian doctors. A considerable number of these civilian doctors are endeavouring to obtain permanent appointments in connection with the Army Medical Department. I have a long letter from a civilian surgeon with regard to a hospital not at Bloemfontein—he sends me a copy of correspondence bearing out his statements—which is one of the worst cases that has been brought to my notice. This doctor says that in this hospital there was a complete lack not only of medical comforts but of drugs; that these were easily obtainable close by; and that he applied for them over and over again, but was refused. He says that men died in his hands solely for want of those drugs, and at the end of his letter he states that he is applying for a permanent appointment under the Government, out of which he will be able to make a decent living, and adds—

> "I mention the fact in order that you may know of my position, for I am a married man with [such and such a number of] young children. I cannot afford to let my family starve, and therefore I pray of you not to disclose my name to the authorities."

When I put the case of these classes to the First Lord of the Treasury as persons whose present livelihood and future interests would prevent their speaking out, the right hon. Gentleman replied that "the suggestion was an unmerited insult" to them. To my mind the real insult to these people lies in placing them in a position in which they must either hold back the truth, or suffer—as they believe, rightly or wrongly, they would suffer—personal loss or prejudice.

MR. IAN MALCOLM (Suffolk, Stowmarket) said the hon. Member had been the recipient of these communications, and had honourably observed the secrecy desired by the writers. But why could not that same secrecy be observed by a judge of the High Court?

*MR. BURDETT-COUTTS: I have already told my hon. friend why in South Africa that secrecy cannot practically be maintained. I have given these cases in order to ask what is the remedy the Government propose for this state of things. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am far from saying that the future interests of these persons would be injured or would be prejudiced by their coming forward to give evidence. My whole point is that they believe they would be so prejudiced, and that that conviction, which cannot be eradicated, will prevent the Commission getting the whole of this valuable evidence. The only way in which this fatal result can be avoided is to relieve them of the responsibility of voluntarily coming forward by giving the Commission compulsory power to call them as witnesses; and I believe there is only one way by which, if they do come forward, you can get at the whole truth, and that is by giving the Commission power to take evidence on oath. There is only one more question, but it is a very important one. How do the Government propose that the Commission shall obtain the evidence of the colonial soldiers who have been invalided home and returned to the colonies? I want to call attention to a very painful incident which I think deserves the consideration of those hon. Members who have been in the habit of making the splendid voluntary aid given by our colonies the subject of the perorations of almost all their recent speeches on the war. I am going to read a letter which is reproduced in the Western Mail, an Australian paper, and which has reference to a number of Australian troops who came down from the front to Cape Town and went to Maitland Camp. The letter is written by a well-known resident at Cape Town, an Australian by birth, and was addressed to Sir Alfred Milner. It is dated Cape Town, 22nd May, and is as follows—

> "Sir,—In the cause of humanity, I feel obliged to bring under your notice the treatment received by about 100 sick and wounded Australians and New Zealanders, who are at present in the Maitland Camp. These men are sadly in want of warm and decent clothing, many being without overcoats and blankets, and their repeated requests for these have not been attended to. The condition of these men is such that, were it known to the people of Australasia, I feel certain a big reaction would set in against volunteering for any future campaign. This, I feel sure, is not the intention of the British Government. . . . So bad is the lot of these men (and, no doubt, other Volunteers) that a number of them have been sent back to the hospital suffering from a relapse; besides which the men who are invalids are not fit to sleep on the ground, especially at this time of the year, much less when they are compelled to do so without blankets, waterproof sheets, and a great-coat. . . . There are men at present in Maitland Camp whom the doctor instructed are to have milk diet, but they cannot obtain any milk. . . . I sincerely trust your Excellency will have the condition of my countrymen improved at your earliest convenience.

"I am your obedient servant,
"HENRY McDONNELL."

This letter was asking Sir A. Milner to go and look at the condition of things on the spot, and the House will remember that Maitland Camp is within two miles of Cape Town. The following reply to the above letter was received—

"High Commissioner's Office,
"May 28, 1900.

"Sir,—I am directed by his Excellency to acknowledge receipt of your letter, and to say that the matter to which you direct his attention, and of which he was entirely unaware, appears to be exceedingly serious, and will receive his immediate attention."

The paper goes on to say that the circumstances under which these men departed for Australia were—

"regarded as the most serious fault of the Imperial authorities. At two o'clock on the day the 'Australasia' left Cape Town, the Australians who lay in their beds at Woodstock Hospital were told that they would have to leave for their own country in two hours time. Many of the men had not been out of bed for weeks, and few had a penny, though much was owing to them all in the way of arrears of wages, while their outfits were all incomplete. The case of Bottomley, the Queenslander, who is still confined to his bed, was, it is alleged, a particularly serious one, and his comrades pleaded that he might be allowed to remain in the hospital; but the officials stated that they had received their orders, and the men would have to go. It was pointed out that Bottomley could not walk, and that he was absolutely penniless, but the authorities were obdurate. At last some of the convalescent soldiers were able to obtain some money, and to hire a cab for the man, who, it is stated, was regarded as being in a dying condition."

This was in the month of May, at Cape Town—the base of supplies, the depôt of the concentrated resources of the mother country, with all her wealth, and all her welcome of these distant sons of hers. If these things have been done in the green tree, what has been done in the dry? What need to inquire into the doings of Departments at Bloemfontein which have permitted these shameful things at Cape Town? I would ask the right hon. Gentleman if he can give us any assurance that the evidence of these men who have returned to their homes will be taken. And now I will come back to the main object of my speech, and will ask the right hon. Gentleman whether it is really too late for the Government, by some means of which I have no knowledge myself, to confer upon this Commission the compulsory powers and the power of taking evidence on oath, which are essential to its carrying on an effective inquiry and arriving at the truth. I venture sincerely to ask the right hon. Gentleman to take a more serious and a little more sympathetic view of this whole question than it appears to me has characterised his attitude towards it hitherto. I ask it on behalf of hundreds of thousands of people in this country who undoubtedly take a serious view of it. I ask it on behalf of our common humanity and of our national strength, of the future welfare of our soldiers, and of the popularity of the military service among those classes from whom the rank and file of the Army, who have suffered most in this matter, are drawn, and in a country which must always depend for its military strength on the voluntary spirit. I have felt bound to criticise the inherent defects of the form of this inquiry instituted by the Government. If the party system in this country has come to such a rigid phase that it is not permitted to a Member of Parliament to take that attitude when a great national object is in view, it is a bad thing for the country. I do not believe that the party with which I have acted will so far fall from their legitimate position of representatives of the people of this country as to treat perfunctorily or petulantly a subject which involves great humane and national interests.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): The hon. Gentleman who has just sat down ended his speech with a lecture addressed to myself in the first place and my colleagues in the second place, and to the party of which he professes to be a member, for our want of sympathy with the cause which he has advocated—all but himself. [Opposition cries of "Oh!" and an HON. MEMBER: Hitting below the belt.] If the hon. Gentleman accuses me or any other Gentleman on this side of want of sympathy with the wounded and suffering in South Africa, he has shown himself utterly unworthy of the party to which he belongs or with which he pretends to act. What does the hon. Gentleman found his accusation of want of sympathy upon? What is his basis? Is that an accusation to be lightly hurled by a member of a political party against the rest of his party without justification? What is the basis of it? If the hon. Gentleman wishes to interrupt me I am quite ready to sit down.

*MR. BURDETT-COUTTS: Sir, what I stated was that, in my opinion, the attitude of the right hon. Gentleman—not the party—had shown a want of sympathy upon this question.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: If the hon. Gentleman confines his attack to myself, apart from my colleagues, I can afford to treat it with contempt, and I do treat it with contempt. There is absolutely not the slightest justification for it. He has stated no justification for it, and as a mere question between himself and me, as he has chosen to make it so, I do not think it worth while occupying the time of the House upon it. Very well; I pass from that purely personal question, in which I take no interest, to the larger issues which the hon. Gentleman has raised in the course of his observations. I should never have gone beyond those issues had not the hon. Gentleman chosen, in the concluding words of his speech, to make a most unwarrantable and outrageous attack upon myself. Now, Sir, the hon. Gentleman, as I understand him, bases his attack upon what has occurred upon the character of the Commission which has been appointed; and what is his attack upon the Commission appointed? As far as I understand, it is confined to the assertion that as that Commission is incapable of taking evidence compulsorily and upon oath, it cannot carry out its duty. The hon. Gentleman appears to me to have utterly misunderstood both the history of previous Commissions in this country and of the legal powers we could have given this Commission. There have been very few Commissions in this country which have had the powers he asks to be given in this case. [MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: There was the Pigott Commission.] The right hon. Gentleman the late Home Secretary, whom I see opposite, appointed a Commission to look into a most critical collision which took place between the police and people connected with a strike—a collision in which lives were lost, and in which party passions were violently aroused—I do not mean political party passions. Was that a satisfactory Commission? It was a Commission precisely of the kind which this Government has appointed to look into this matter.

*MR. BURDETT-COUTTS: Is the right hon. Gentleman speaking of the Belfast riots?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: No, I am not. If the hon. Gentleman had been listening to me he would have known I was not speaking of the Belfast riots. I was speaking of the late Home Secretary, who had nothing to do with the Belfast riots. That Commission took evidence, and took it successfully, and the question was fully investigated. There have been many other Commissions equally successful. I want to put this point before the House and the hon. Gentleman. He wishes a Bill to be brought in to make this a Statutory Commission—like the Parnell Commission, I suppose, which appears to excite the admiration of the hon. Member for South Donegal, or like the Commission which inquired into the Sheffield case.

*MR. BURDETT-COUTTS: Will the right hon. Gentleman permit me to state the object of my former interruption? I understand that the Belfast Commission was turned afterwards into a Statutory Commission because it was found that it would not have worked otherwise.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I think that is possible, though the facts are not present to my mind; but I do not see how the interruption is relevant, because I never made any allusion to the Belfast riots. The Commission I was referring to was that which had to do with the Featherstone riots. But supposing we had a Statutory Commission. That statute could not be extended to the Cape, it could not be extended to Australia. It would have had no power to compel witnesses to come from either of those countries. [HON. MEMBERS: Why not?] Of course, I do not say this House has not a right to override—— [Nationalist cheers.] Clearly, the hon. Gentleman's allies are on that side. This House, of course, has power to suspend the constitution of every self-governing colony. Are those the powers you wish to exercise? This Legislature has the power, and it is the only Legislature which has the power to appoint a Statutory Commission. This Legislature has the power, no doubt, to override every self-governing colony in the Empire; it has the right to pass what laws it chooses for any part of the Empire; but such a thing has never been heard of in the history of this country since self-governing colonies were established, as that this Legislature should pass a statute to compel colonial witnesses to attend upon a Commission appointed by this country, and to give that Commisson the power to administer an oath. This is the policy which I understand the hon. Gentleman seriously advocates with the assistance of hon. Gentlemen opposite. In the first place it is an impossible policy, and in the second place it is a futile and absurd policy even from the point of view of the hon. Gentleman himself. What are the hon. Gentleman's objections to the Commission that has been appointed? His objections are these—that the witnesses are afraid to give evidence, that whether they be soldiers or civilians their cowardice is such that no protection given to them by this Commission—anonymity, secrecy, anything else—is sufficient to enable the truth to be extracted from them. That is the hon. Gentleman's objection. Before I comment on the character which the hon. Gentleman gives to our soldiers and civilians of this country in South Africa, let me ask him how that difficulty would have been got over by a Statutory Commission.

*MR. BURDETT-COUTTS: If the right hon. Gentleman asks me the question I will answer it. I have already answered it in my speech. I say if the Commission have compulsory powers to call witnesses it relieves the witness of all responsibility for coming forward; and if they have powers to take evidence on oath the witness must, of course, tell the whole truth.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: What the hon. Gentleman pointed out to an astonished House was that the fear of consequences in the minds of these witnesses was such that they could not be expected to tell the truth. I want to know how that is to be cured by the Statutory Commission which he desires, even if the Statutory Commission had, or could have, powers of calling witnesses in South Africa or in the colonies, as the hon. Gentleman appears to desire. I have heard—not often, I admit, from these benches—but I have heard in this House attacks upon the moral courage, upon the honesty, upon the probity, and upon the public spirit of our soldiers and civilians, but I have never heard an attack from any quarter of the House like that which the hon. Gentleman has thought fit to make.

*MR. BURDETT-COUTTS: I repudiate absolutely the suggestion. I made no attack. I gave specific instances of men who said they were afraid of coming forward and making their names known.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: We differ, I suppose, as to what an attack consists of. I call it an attack upon a man to say that he knows the truth but dare not say it. The hon. Gentleman does not call that an attack. However, we need not quarrel about words. All I meant to indicate to the House was that the hon. Gentleman had scattered broadcast the accusation over both civilians and soldiers serving us in South Africa that they were afraid to come forward, that they were afraid to tell the truth, because of the consequences to themselves; and, not content with attacking them for this incredible meanness and cowardice, he accused their superiors of not less meanness, not less incredible meanness, in suggesting that honest evidence honestly given would destroy the chances of a man being promoted.

*MR. BURDETT-COUTTS: As the right hon. Gentleman continues to make these accusations against me, I must answer them. I particularly stated that I did not believe that these would be the results to these witnesses; the point was that they feared that those would be the results.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I withdraw absolutely my charge that he accused the authorities of the incredible meanness of which I thought he had accused them. I withdraw that. All he does is to accuse the subordinates, the witnesses, of the meanness of fearing the result and of the folly of supposing that the result would ensue. I do not know that he makes his case much better, though I am very anxious not to misrepresent him. I must say that the hon. Gentleman is peculiarly unfortunate in the character of his correspondence. He has read out a certain number of letters. He tells us that they are mere specimens of hundreds or thousands.

Mr. SWIFT MacNEILL: No, no.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman opposite will allow the hon. Gentleman to contradict me himself. [Several Hon. Members: He has done so.]

*Mr. BURDETT-COUTTS: I never said anything about hundreds or thousands.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: Innumerable. I do not exactly know the numerical valuation that is to be given to the adjective innumerable—the adjective used by the hon. Member.

*Mr. BURDETT-COUTTS: I did not say innumerable. I said I would not say innumerable.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: Many, but not innumerable; but, after all, why should hon. Gentlemen quarrel with me on this subject, considering that the whole case depends upon the number of these letters? If the letters are not representative, what is the use of quoting them in this House? What do they come to? What is the value of them? It is only because they potentially represent hundreds or thousands that they are of any value whatever. If it is merely Mr. A or Mr. B who thinks the hon. Gentleman is a proper representative to send these communications to, it does not matter to me, to the inquiry, to anybody; but if the hon. Gentleman wishes us to assume that the letters he has read out are mere specimens of a vast number which he might have read out, then I say he has a most unfortunate set of correspondents, and, since the time when anonymous accusations were put down in the lion's mouth at Venice, I do not know that any gentleman has been so favoured as the hon. Gentleman. The hon. Gentleman has, I believe, already been called as a witness. He has already given all his own evidence, and he has been cross-examined upon his evidence. Is it a fair use of his privileges as a Member of this House to come before us and the tribunal of the country while the inquiry is still on, after his own examination, when there is no opportunity of cross-examining him or criticising him, and giving this supplementary appendix to the evidence which he has already given? Is that the way he thinks a great inquiry of this sort ought to be treated? Is that the value he puts upon his own evidence? Is that the manner in which he thinks this great tribunal, the House of Commons itself, ought to be treated? If the hon. Gentleman had attempted to take the course he has taken to-night in reference to any case being tried before one of the judicial tribunals of this country, he would have been stopped, first by the Speaker, and if not by you, Mr. Speaker, by the general public opinion of the House. I am convinced that the general public opinion of the House takes the same view of this question that I do. It is not fitting, it is not in the public interest, that at the time when an inquiry is going on we should be debating this question in circumstances in which alone debate can take place in this House, having ex parte statements made from this side or that side of the House, without the power of examination, without the power of cross-examination, without having any witnesses before us, and without the power of coming to an impartial verdict. That must be left until we have the result of the inquiry before us. I confess, though I have not altogether approved of the line the hon. Gentleman has taken in this matter, I have entirely agreed with him from the beginning as to the necessity of an inquiry, before he ever raised the question in this House. I have all along taken the view that there should be an impartial and thorough and systematic inquiry into the matter. I have always held that view, and so far I agree with the hon. Gentleman; but when I heard him to-night, after having asked for an inquiry, systematically depreciate the character of every witness that has come before the Commission; when I heard him complain that the truth is not to be expected from the inquiry; when I heard him tell the House that the organisation of the Medical Department was so rigid in South Africa that nobody would come forward to give evidence; when I heard him state that witnesses were prepared either to abstain from giving evidence or to give false evidence because their worldly career was at stake; when I heard him discredit this inquiry which he has asked for from the beginning—then, for the first time, I began to doubt the evidence the hon. Gentleman himself has given in this House. I am perfectly frank with the hon. Gentleman. I have absolutely believed everything he has told us about the facts he has seen and about the conclusions he has drawn in South Africa, though I confess I thought the picture was probably a one-sided one; but I am sorry that the hon. Gentleman, by the speech he has made to-night, has shown such evident anxiety as to the result of the inquiry that is to be held. I think the course he has taken is not only contrary to every sound Parliamentary tradition, but to every suggestion of common sense. I think that, for the sake of the cause which he himself professes to have at heart, there cannot be a more imprudent procedure than to attempt to throw these unworthy suspicions and aspersions not only on the Commissioners themselves who are making the inquiry, but upon every witness, except himself, who is likely to be heard.

SIR WALTER FOSTER (Derbyshire, Ilkeston): I should never have thought that a discussion on a question of this kind was one which was likely to have excited any party passion or personal recrimination. I should have thought that on a question of this kind no passion or temper, such as we have unfortunately seen exhibited on more than one occasion, would have been displayed. I regret that from the day when the hon. Member for Westminster made his first statement in the House, there has been exhibited on the Treasury bench an amount of temper which was not creditable to the right hon. Gentleman or anyone holding his position. I think that throughout this business we have been placed in an unfortunate position. The hon. Member for Westminster brings before the public and the House, animated by the spirit of public duty, certain information which he thinks ought to be laid before the House and the country, and as the result of that we have given us, not very spontaneously or cheerfully, a Commission of Inquiry.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The hon. Gentleman is mistaken. The Commission was decided upon before the hon. Member for Westminster made a single statement upon the subject to this House.

SIR WALTER FOSTER: I am not in a position to know when it was decided upon. I only know when it was announced. The public announcement of the inquiry in this House is what I refer to. When the Commission was announced it was announced with certain powers which many of us felt were inadequate. I think it was unfortunate that the right hon. Gentleman opposite, and those who agreed with him in appointing this Commission, looked upon its scope from far too narrow a point of view. They regarded it as an inquiry into an attack upon the Army Medical administration in South Africa. The reference to it was to inquire into the treatment of the sick and wounded in South Africa, and that was a very narrow reference, and practically referred only to the Army Medical Department.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The reference was to inquire into the treatment of every sick and wounded man in South Africa. You cannot go further than that.

SIR WALTER FOSTER: If it refers only to the medical persons engaged, they are all under the Army Medical administration, and therefore the reference has a comparatively narrow object. The civilian doctors are part of the Army Medical administration and the reference is simply to the treatment of the sick and wounded. This inquiry ought not to have had so narrow an object. I am sure every Member of this House looks upon the inquiry from a broad point of view, as an inquiry which ought to be gone into as the public wish it to be gone into, in order to get at the whole truth as to the treatment of our soldiers and the causes of disease. No charge or attack is made on the Army Medical staff, or on any surgeons employed in South Africa. All it is wanted to ascertain is why these unfortunate soldiers in South Africa did not have adequate treatment. When the right hon. Gentleman said that the hon. Member for Westminster brought a charge of meanness against persons unwilling to come forward as witnesses, anyone who has had the conduct of a public institution knows that one of the most difficult things is to get witnesses to come forward. That difficulty is in the way of every inquiry that is held in connection with any large hospital in the country, or in any large public institution. Still more does it dog the footsteps of a great organisation such as we have to deal with in this matter. But, beyond this, there is the esprit de corps which I am glad to say exists in the British Army, to its honour, and men do not like to come forward and make complaints against their associates. Gentlemen who have been in South Africa have spoken and written to me in the same spirit as the hon. Gentleman, and scores of others have been written to, and therefore the attack of the right hon. Gentleman on the hon. Member for Westminster is not one which ought to be approved by the House. I have no question of party consideration in this matter, and I never had. I have always looked upon it from the point of view of the humanity which belongs to my profession, and I have never desired to obtain the slightest tittle of party advantage out of it. But I desire that it should be sifted to the very bottom in order that we should get at the truth, and that we should have full knowledge of why these heroic soldiers were allowed to die in those bell tents at Bloemfontein under shockingly bad conditions. That is a thing which every citizen has a right to know, and to demand that it should be probed to the very bottom. The whole question is a much bigger question than it has appeared to the House in the speeches that have been delivered. We have had in this unfortunate campaign in South Africa an amount of disease beyond the ordinary experience of such wars. Up to 7th July we have lost more than 3,000 from typhoid fever, and tested by the percentage of mortality given by Lord Roberts, that means that there have been between 15,000 and 16,000 cases of this disease among our troops in South Africa. I am understating rather than overstating the figures, for I believe more than 3,000 have died up to this time. The records have been published up to the 7th July, but since then many others have died of this disease. It is an enormous blot on this campaign that we should have something approaching 15,000 cases of typhoid fever among our troops, and it shows that there must have been something wrong in the medical administration in South Africa that no provision was made against this almost certain outbreak of disease, although the War Department was warned in the public press and by other means that such an outbreak would take place. The fact is, that every village and town that our troops had to march through was known to be a source of infection and disease before they arrived, and yet under these circumstances adequate precautions were not taken to prevent its spread. The result is, that if we compare the deaths from disease up to the present time and the deaths from disease in the Franco-German War we find that we have lost from disease a much larger proportion than the Germans lost. The German army consisted of 887,000 men, or four times the size of our army in South Africa. Up to 7th July—and it is now even worse—we lost 20·7 per thousand of our men from disease, while the Germans, with all the rigour and severity of the winter around Paris, lost only 13·7 per thousand. That shows that our administration is faulty, that something is wrong in the medical administration of the army in South Africa, and that the cause of this outbreak ought to be inquired into by this Commission. What I complain of is that the right hon. Gentleman, in drawing the reference to the Commission, did not make it sufficiently wide to enable the Commissioners to inquire into the causes that brought about this enormous prevalence of preventable disease among our soldiers, in order that we might be in a position to avoid a similar condition of things in any future campaign for the benefit of the men who fight for their country. Finally, I would say as regards the whole position that this is an example of the want of foresight which the administration has shown throughout this war. The same spirit that led them to cable to the colonies that they wanted infantry and not mounted men, has brought about loss of life among our soldiers. The same want of foresight that led them to think that 40,000 or 50,000 men would suffice to finish the war, is the same want of foresight that has brought about this disaster to our soldiers. From the beginning to the end of this campaign the Government have not shown adequate foresight, either in the management of the war or in taking precautions for the protection of the men whom they sent out to fight.

*COLONEL BLUNDELL (Lancashire, Ince): I wish to say that I believe that this Commission will arrive at a proper conclusion. I venture to say that no soldier would look at this question as reflecting solely on the Medical Department. It is a question whether what my hon friend the Member for Westminster saw at Bloemfontein was caused by the Medical Department, or whether it was unavoidable, or might have been avoided by some different arrangement of transport. There are two parties interested in the case, the staff of the Army and the staff of the Army Medical Department, and between the two the Commission will, I am sure, arrive at the truth.

MR. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.): I desire to offer a few observations to the House on a single point, namely, the condition of the troops now serving under General Rundle in South Africa. I should not have troubled the House with the matter if I had been met fairly and reasonably by the War Office. I asked last week and again to-day for some information as to the condition of these troops, who upon credible testimony have been reported to be starving. I asked also whether even now at the end of three months any steps had been taken to provide these troops with adequate food. I received an answer which I will not characterise as I think it deserves, because if I did I should probably exceed the limit of Parliamentary debate, but it was not answer that should have been given to a Member of this House on an important subject, and I may add that the substance of the reply was not helped by the jaunty manner in which it was given by the Financial Secretary to the War Office. The substance of the reply was that the War Office knew nothing of the condition of General Rundle's troops, and that they did not intend to inquire. This is a matter which has excited the most painful interest and anxiety in the public mind, and especially in the minds of those who have relatives serving under General Rundle, and in those circumstances I do submit to the House that the answer which I received showed something very like callousness of feeling towards our brave private soldiers in South Africa, and also a want of respect towards this House and the country. It is monstrous that the War Office, which is discredited and mistrusted by the nation, should adopt an arrogant tone of this kind when a simple inquiry is addressed to it by a Member of this House with regard to the condition of troops who, as I have said, have been, on credible evidence, reported to be starving. If the House will stand that from the War Office, it will stand anything. A description of the troops serving under General Rundle for the last three months inevitably recalls to mind the description of our troops in the Crimea now nearly half a century ago. I limit this inquiry to the special case of the troops serving under General Rundle, but I am not at all sure that the case of those troops is an exceptional one. In fact, I have been assured by those who are far more likely to know than I am that the case of General Rundle's troops is not an exception. I desire to limit my inquiry to that case, however, for the simple reason that I have in my possession an extract from a letter written by a soldier serving under General Rundle, and I thought, also, that by limiting the matter in this way it might be possible for me to give a precision to the inquiry not possible, for me at least, in the case of other troops. I therefore come to the actual condition of the troops under General Rundle. In the first place, before I refer to my private information I should like to draw the attention of the House to an account given of the condition of the troops by a distinguished and very accurate correspondent—I mean Mr. Hales, the war correspondent of the Daily News. On the 30th July the Daily News published a long letter from Mr. Hales, dated the 11th July, which stated—

> "The men are absolutely starving. Many of the infantrymen are so weak that they can barely stagger along. They are worn to shadows, and move with weary, listless footsteps. . . . General Rundle faces the work in front of him with men whose knees knock under them when they march, with hands that shake when they shoulder their rifles—shake, but not with fear; tremble, but not with wounds, but from weakness, from poverty of blood and muscle, brought about by continual hunger. Are those men fit to storm a kopje? Are they fit to tramp the whole night through, to make a forced march to turn a position, and then to fight as their fathers fought next day?"

That is how Mr. Hales described the condition of the troops. I have an extract from a letter written by a private soldier in a famous regiment now serving under General Rundle. It is dated the 24th April, and he says—

> "We are nearly starving. We have not seen a piece of bread for three weeks, and we have been living on biscuits about the size of Spratt's dog biscuits, which contain bran instead of wheat."

On the 20th May he wrote that the allowance of biscuits per man per day had been reduced, and that the troops were fairly starving. The letter continues—

> "The other day they gave us one and a quarter biscuit to last us for the day. Next day was worse—a half pint of warm coffee for breakfast, but nothing else. I have been so hungry that I have eaten tea-leaves after they have been used."

Referring to the day on which the battle of Senekal was fought, he says—

> "We got up at 3.45 a.m. Breakfast consisted of one and a quarter biscuit per man; then we marched and arrived at camp at 10 p.m., having been without food or water for eighteen hours."

On the 26th June he states that things were as bad as ever, though they then had received tents, having previously had to sleep on the ground without any protection from frost, cold, or wet, and on one occasion he states that his coat was frozen to his back. The only practical question which the House has to consider is, was this state of things necessary or inevitable? I suppose that we shall have the usual answer from the War Office that it was inevitable. Mr. Hales has, however, anticipated that reply. He said that General Rundle's troops were not isolated, and that supplies could be got to them. He asks what became of the provisions, and he answers, "Ask at the snug railway sidings," and he adds that with ordinary management the food which had been got to Cape Town ought to have been within easy reach of our troops. Let us see how it stands with regard to General Rundle. General Rundle has been on duty for three months and has a front reaching from Winburg to the Basutoland border. Winburg was the terminus of the railway, and Mr. Hales himself showed how supplies might be obtained, because he himself obtained them. He relates how he rode to Winburg station with a companion, taking with them two Cape carts. They took train at Winburg and went down the line to Cape Town, got their supplies, came back to Winburg and brought the supplies into General Rundle's camp, without an escort. If Mr. Hales and his friend could get supplies in this way, I want to know how it was that supplies for General Rundle's troops could not have been obtained from the same base by the same means. The Under Secretary for War told us the other day, as illustrating the difficulties of getting supplies in South Africa, that it was as difficult as if London were depending on Rome for its food. I respectfully say that that is an inapt and misleading illustration.

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): That phrase was used in a letter written by Mr. Burnham, the scout.

MR. PICKERSGILL: I do not quite appreciate the force of the hon. Gentleman's interjection, because the phrase was part of his argument, and he adopted it by way of explaining the difficulties of the position.

MR. WYNDHAM: That was an illustration used by Mr. Burnham, the scout, and I would prefer that the hon. Gentleman dealt with Mr. Burnham.

MR. PICKERSGILL: That interjection is entirely unnecessary and irrelevant. It does not matter who originated the phrase. The Under Secretary was defending his Department, and in order to explain the difficulties of the situation he adopted the expression that it was just the same as if London were depending on Rome. I repeat very respectfully that that appears to me to be an inapt and misleading comparison, for this reason. We know that supplies for the troops arrived at Cape Town, and what we want to know is why, apparently, they had not got further than Cape Town and why they had not got into the neighbourhood of our troops, for whom they were intended. There has been one noble tradition of the British Army, to which I think is to be attributed not a little of its success, and that is that in times past our generals were careful of the food of their soldiers, and they recognised the military truth that "an army marches on its belly." They kept up supplies and fed their men well. In one quarter of South Africa it is only fair to say that that tradition has been kept up. There is one man—a man who I venture to think has received, up to the present time at any rate, scant justice in this country—I mean Sir R. Buller, who has worked on the old lines of keeping up supplies and feeding his men well, and there is accumulating evidence that in other parts of the stricken field in South Africa, under different direction, the men have, to put it plainly, been starved. I want to know how that happens, and who is responsible for it. My object in putting this question to the Under Secretary for War was a very modest one. It was confined to the specific case of General Rundle's command. It was a perfectly proper question, it was couched in proper Parliamentary form, and I was only following the recognised traditions of this House in putting it. I have to complain that to that question I have received no reply. I press for an answer to that question now, and if the War Office is to be allowed to put us off in this jaunty manner, I shall feel that at least I have tried to do my duty as a Member of this House.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The hon. Member has put a specific question to the War Office, and, as the representative of that Department, I am bound to reply. The hon. Member has taken exception to the replies he has received from my hon. friend and myself; but if he makes complaint as to the answers, I make no complaint as to the question. The question he put as to whether the Government could say anything to relieve anxiety as to the condition of the troops under General Rundle has been present to the minds of us all for eight or nine days. The mail arrived on Saturday and brought letters from newspaper correspondents and others describing how at the time the letters were despatched General Rundle's troops were on very short rations indeed. The hon. Member is not the only one who has received such letters. I have received two or three myself from relatives and friends serving with General Rundle, but I am bound to say that while they described the circumstances they did not accept the conclusion that they were such as could have been easily avoided. They appreciated the difficulties of carrying on a campaign in a mountainous district. The hon. Member has commented on the answer he received that no official information was to hand. That is true. Unless General Rundle—who, by subjecting his troops to these undoubted hardships, has achieved in four weeks one of the greatest successes of the war—had, instead of prosecuting his arduous operations to their successful end, sat down and written his report, it would have been physically impossible for the information to have reached this country. The earliest information reached this country on Saturday, and unless General Rundle had suspended operations in order to write his report it would not have been possible for us to give any explanation. There is an unwillingness on the part of the hon. Gentleman to accept the explanation we gave, and he complains of the tone and substance of the replies he received to a perfectly natural question. No slight was intended to the hon. Member, nor any disregard of the position and responsibility of this House, when I informed him, with, I believe, courtesy, that we had no information until a few days ago. The War Office had no information as to the facts when I answered the hon. Gentleman a few days ago; but having received private letters from close relatives and friends, I was unwilling to withhold the circumstances to which they alluded, and so I added that, owing to the nature of the country and of the operations, General Rundle's troops were exposed to hardship. The questions of fact are hardly in dispute. The hon. Member has said he believed that the troops under General Rundle four or five weeks ago were on half or even quarter rations; but in order to illustrate the difficulties of transport, I may say that when Lord Roberts arrived at Germiston, before Johannesburg, the troops had to be ready to fight a battle without an ounce of food; and if they had not broken into Johannesburg they would have suffered hardships of a most deplorable character. That is incidental, not to this war alone, but to all wars. A daring strategic plan means that the amount of food must be really measured by ounces. So many days were allowed to strike the blow. If it succeeded all was well, like Cromwell's attack on General Leslie at Dunbar, and if it failed, there was a retreat like Napoleon's from Moscow. The question is, has all been done that could have been done in this campaign? That is a question of the most solemn importance, but not one that can be profitably decided on the Appropriation Bill. It must be investigated fearlessly, jealously, curiously, and to its uttermost depths. That is what every man in the House and in the country must feel. But the examination must be made when the evidence is available, and all the reports on the operations are in our hands, in a cold and impartial spirit. It was asked what there was peculiar in these operations and in this country to make it likely that the troops would be reduced to half rations. A glance at the map answered the question. There was the railway fifty or sixty miles to the west of an Alpine district, in which the operations were being conducted; and there were 15,000 troops distributed over an arc of 150 miles. The hon. Member says if the war correspondents at the front could take provisions, why should not the whole army be able to take full rations. I might go a ten miles walk to-morrow with a sandwich in my pocket, but it does not follow that I could find sandwiches and bread and cheese to feed an army of 15,000 men distributed over an arc of 150 miles. There must be an enormous organisation working without a hitch to do that. There was a very good organisation; but it had no direct railway communication, and the supply route by road was threatened by an enemy who had already overwhelmed one isolated force after another. It should be remembered that General Rundle, the circumstances of whose force have attracted attention owing to the last mail which has arrived in this country, was the chief staff officer of Lord Kitchener during the whole of his operations up the Nile. For years everyone at home and abroad had been lavishing praise upon the administration of that campaign as far as the transport was concerned. [Mr. MACNEILL: 'No, no. It was extremely hard work.] The hon. Member really did himself an injustice by these interruptions. Now are we to believe that a man of that capacity, whose transport and food arrangements in Egypt excited the admiration of the whole world, has failed egregiously in South Africa, or that there has been a bad service from the Home Government, or that Lord Roberts would fail to bring that fact to our knowledge? These are things to be studied in the future. Let us find out, if we can, whether better provision can be made for a campaign in a mountainous country, at such an enormous distance from our base, and with only a 3ft. 6in. railway running for 500 miles from our secondary base. All we know is that we have four months provisions for every man in South Africa, and that we have appointed officers whom we believe competent to feed these troops. We realise, as some hon. Gentlemen who have taken part in the debate do not realise, what the work of the Army needs, and I hope that in a few weeks time the work of the War Office in considering the whole campaign will begin.

MR. HAVELOCK WILSON (Middlesbrough) said he wanted to ask the President of the Board of Trade several questions with regard to matters which had been discussed in the House on previous occasions. The right hon. Gentleman would remember that some time ago he made a promise that he would insist upon the P. and O. Company complying with the law. He had been anxiously waiting to see what action the President of the Board of Trade would take. He observed from the papers that the chairman of the P. and O. Company had made the statement at a meeting of the directors of that company that if they were to comply with the Act of Parliament, which provided that the lascars should have 72 cubic feet of space on board ship, that would mean a loss to the P. and O. Company of nearly £20,000 a year. That meant that the P. and O. Company had been swindling the seamen at the rate of £20,000 a year. Moreover the chairman of the P. and O. Company challenged the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade to commence proceedings against the company in order to have the law tested. He hoped that the right hon. Gentleman would be prepared to say definitely what had been done in regard to this very serious matter. He found that thirty passengers on the outward bound P. and O. steamer the "Rome," which arrived at Gibraltar on Monday, had been placed in quarantine for ten days in consequence of two lascars suspected of having the plague having been put on shore from the "Rome" before she left the Royal Albert Dock. The two lascars died, and one of them when taken to the hospital was suffering from plague which it appeared had broken out in the ship in consequence of overcrowding. He had repeatedly pointed out to the right hon. Gentleman the danger not only to the lascars themselves, but to the people of this country, of having the plague brought to our shores in consequence of the insanitary condition in which these men lived on board ship. It now appeared that the crew of the "Rome" had been in quarantine, and one man had died in the Albert Dock and two in the hospital. That ought to tell the right hon. Gentleman thas it was time to take prompt action, and insist, as far as he could, that the lascar seamen should have proper accommodation, and that that accommodation was kept in a sanitary condition. A short time ago he asked the right hon. Gentleman a question with regard to the provisions that were supplied to seamen on board British ships.

He had no doubt that the right hon. Gentleman would inform the House that night that he himself had no control over the quantity of the provision supply to seamen on board British ships. He (Mr. Wilson) would dispute that contention, and prove that the Board of Trade had some control or some right to interfere with regard to the quantity of provisions supplied to seamen on board British ships. This question of the quantity of the provision supply was a very important one. At the present time there were a number of complaints made by shipowners of the desertion of seamen from British ships in foreign ports, and no doubt the shipowners were always ready to blame the seamen for these desertions. They said it was due to drunkenness on the part of the men, and that British seamen allowed themselves to get into the hands of the crimps at foreign ports, and caused a great deal of expense and inconvenience to the shipowners. He would prove that it was entirely due to the manner in which the British shipowners fed the sailors on board their ships. The articles of agreement issued by the Board of Trade, which the crews had to sign, provided a scale of provisions containing twenty-four items — water, bread, beef, pork, preserved meat, preserved potatoes, preserved vegetables, flour, peas, rice, oatmeal, dried fruit, butter, molasses, vinegar, pickles, etc. But if the right hon. Gentleman would make inquiry of his Department he would find that in almost every case, instead of the men getting the twenty-four items provided for in these articles of agreement they only got eight—three quarts of water daily, 1 lb. bread daily, 1½ lb. beef four times a week, 1¼ lb. salt pork three times a week, ½ lb. flour three times a week, ½ pint of peas three times a week, ⅛ oz. tea daily, ½ oz. coffee or chickory daily, and 2 oz. of sugar. That completed the list. He had had the cost of the scale of provisions supplied by British shipowners to the sailors carefully estimated. He ought to say, however, that the men employed on the large liners were treated differently, and were fed liberally and well. He meant the White Star, the Cunard, the Castle, the Union, the Orient, the Shaw-Savill, and the Wilson lines. But outside these liners the sailors were all confined strictly to the scale of provisions he had mentioned, and the cost of it worked out at 3s. 5½d. per week. Did the right hon. Gentleman suppose that it was possible for any man to be content, and remain in the service of these shipowners for any length of time, when fed on such a scale of provisions? Seven pounds of biscuit for a week cost the shipowners 7¼d.; six pounds salt beef (this was remarkable) cost 1s. 3¼d. He questioned very much whether it was beef. That beef was old donkey which was carried over to Antwerp, salted up with saltpetre, and put into casks marked "Best ox beef." It could not be beef. He defied anyone to buy decent beef in London under 8d. or 9d. a lb., and it was impossible to supply beef at the rate of 1s. 3¼d. for 6 lb. Salt pork, 3¼ lb. three times a week, 1s. 0¾d.; flour—the extravagance of the shipowner in supplying the sailors with flour at 1¾d. for the week; peas, 1¼d.; rice, ¼d.; the tea which the sailors get was supplied at 9d. per lb. out of bond, and cost the shipowner 1½d. for the seven days; coffee, 1¾d.; sugar, 1¾d., or a total for the week's supply of 3s. 6d. He had heard sailors say that what they got were dog biscuits, but that was a libel on the dogs, for he found that dog biscuits cost 35s. per cwt., while sailors' biscuits cost only 10s. 6d. per cwt. On board American ships he found a very different state of affairs prevailed. They got a far better provision scale—biscuit, beef, pork, flour, canned meats, fresh bread daily, fresh, preserved, or dried potatoes, tomatoes, peas, beans, rice, tea, sugar, molasses, fruit, pickles, vinegar, corn meal, mustard, pepper, salt, etc. All that cost the American shipowner 6s. 8d. per week. The great difference between the American and the British scale of provisions was that the former was provided for by Act of Congress, and the American seaman knew exactly to what he was entitled and could demand it. But the Board of Trade arrangements were deceiving to the men. The Board of Trade in the articles of agreement provided a scale of provisions which was supposed to consist of twenty-four items. If the men could get that it would be all right, but they only get eight items out of the twenty-four. That was the cause of all the trouble about men deserting at foreign ports. Men who went on board a British ship were expected to work on food which cost 3s. 6d. a week. Of course men could not work on such conditions, and the consequence was that they became disagreeable, insubordinate, and on the first opportunity they deserted the ship. He wanted to know what the right hon. Gentleman was going to do in regard to this matter. He was sure that the right hon. Gentleman could do something. He remembered when he tried to get a proper provision scale passed by Act of Parliament the Board of Trade opposed it on the ground that that was a matter that ought to be left to the shipowners. The shipowners had had the matter in their own hands for the last five years, and instead of there being an improvement things were gradually getting worse. He maintained that the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade could send out a circular to the shipowners calling attention to the fact that they had only provided for eight articles of food out of the twenty-four in the articles of agreement, and recommending the shipowners to carry out the articles of agreement. He had no doubt that that would do some good, and if it did not have the desired effect the right hon. Gentleman could bring in a Bill next year to regulate the matter. There was another question to which he wanted an answer from the right hon. Gentleman. He had repeatedly called the attention of the Board of Trade and the Foreign Office to it, and he was glad to see both the President of the Board of Trade and the Under Secretary for the Foreign Office present, because they might be able to give him some satisfactory answer. He had repeatedly called the attention of the Board of Trade and Foreign Office to the fact that a number of Her Majesty's Consuls in foreign ports had taken upon themselves the responsibility of imprisoning British seamen without any trial; and he wanted to know from the right hon. Gentleman what law in this country gave power to Her Majesty's Consuls to have seamen arrested, and kept in prison without trial. The right hon. Gentleman was aware of one of the cases to which be referred, because he brought it under the notice of the Board of Trade four months ago. A man named Gardner serving on board the ship "Dalblain," seemed to have some grievance with his captain. The men employed in discharging cargo at Iquique made a kind of piece task that they would load a certain number of lighters alongside, and when finished that they would do no more work until fresh lighters arrived. The captain came on the scene, and wanted to know why the men were not working, and ordered Gardner to go over the side and paint. Gardner said—

> "I have done my share of the contract, and won't do more until the fresh lighters have arrived."

The captain went ashore and arranged with the Consul that the police should go on board and arrest the man and put him ashore. Whereupon the Consul sentenced him to twenty days imprisonment. At the end of that time, when he was let out of prison, the man was conveyed by the police on board ship, and at the end of the voyage the captain added insult to injury by charging the man £10 for prison expenses. The right hon. Gentleman promised to communicate with Iquique, and he wanted to know from the right hon. Gentleman what had happened, and if the Consul had given any explanation of his conduct. He wanted more than that. He had a right to ask the Government to dismiss a Consul from his position who dared to place a British seaman in prison without a trial and to keep him in prison without a trial. That Consul had no power or authority to do anything of the sort. Then he had the case of the ship called the "South Australian." That vessel was lying at Beira, in East Africa. The crew had been employed during the week working from six in the morning to six in the evening. On Sunday morning they were turned out at six o'clock to wash down the decks. Now, he did not object to washing down the decks on a Sunday morning. That was the rule on board British ships, and the men in question did not object; but while the men were washing the decks the chief officer came along and ordered a certain number of the men to take down the derricks. They refused. They were taken to the captain, who repeated the order, and they again refused. Then the captain entered their offence in the official log, and the next morning the men were ordered to go ashore to the Consul. They went to the Consul's office, and were not taken in together. The captain and two of the officers were with the Consul when each man went in. Each was asked if he had refused to do work, and each said that he refused to take down the derricks, but did not refuse to wash the decks. They were ordered on board the ship, and two hours after they had commenced the performance of their duties Portuguese police were sent on board and the men were taken ashore, one to do twenty days and the other four weeks. He had since seen that that Consul had been murdered, and in all probability it was such imprisonment that had led up to it. These cases of imprisoning British seamen in different ports were occurring almost every day, and the Foreign Office and the Board of Trade would have to take immediate steps to prevent them. He had complained many times, and his complaints appeared to make no difference; but he would tell the British Consuls through the right hon. Gentleman who had control over them, that if they continued to send British seamen to prison, a course would be adopted which would bring them to their senses. Writs would be served on the Consuls for false imprisonment, and they would be put to the expense of coming to England to stand their trial and perhaps to pay substantial damages. Then they would know something about British law and how far their powers went. The House and the country had a right to know whether it was with the approval of the Foreign Office that the Consuls were allowed to take a liberty of that kind. It was a liberty that would not be tolerated in this country for five minutes. If any person in this country dared to arrest a person unlawfully he was bound to say that person would be soon brought to his senses. He wanted to know what the Board of Trade intended to do in the matter. Was he to be told again that the Government had no information and that the matter was still under consideration? Another matter he wished to complain of had reference to the Foreign Office. A steamer was stranded on the Turkish coast and the men were compelled to temporarily leave the vessel. Not long afterwards some Turks boarded the vessel and stole the men's clothes and effects. The vessel was afterwards got off, and subsequently the Foreign Office was asked to demand some compensation from the Turkish Government for the loss of the men's effects. He was surprised that this Conservative Government, who prided themselves on their great power and influence in Europe, and who imagined that foreign nations trembled before them, were not able to get any satisfaction from Turkey. They were told that nothing could be done in the matter. Surely the Government might have done more than that. Was that all they could do for the protection of British seamen against brigands on the Turkish coast near the Dardanelles? Was that the best protection they could look forward to? He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would be able to give some more information with regard to the matter, and he trusted he would be able to say that the Government had not dropped the question, that it was still under the consideration of the Foreign Office, and that strong representations would be made to the Turkish Government with a view to insisting on compensation. He was sorry to say that at the end of the seventh session of this Parliament he could not give the President of the Board of Trade very much credit for having done anything in the way of improving the condition of the seafaring population of this country. In fact, working men in general would be able to give very little credit to this Government for having done much for them. They were too busy with the war, and had no time to look into questions affecting working men. No doubt when the General Election came some of them would be able to remind members of the Government of the fact that in six years they had performed very little for the working classes. The right hon. Gentleman had a splendid opportunity of doing some good for the seamen if he had taken it. The Liberal Government appointed a Committee to inquire into the manning of ships. The Committee sat for two years, and recommended a number of things with a view to improving the conditions of sailors and firemen on board ships. They recommended that no fireman should be called to stoke more than three and a half tons of coal in the twenty-four hours in cold climates and two and a half tons in hot climates. The President of the Board of Trade brought in a Bill to deal with that question. What did the right hon. Gentleman do? His Department issued regulations to the effect that on board steamers of a certain tonnage there should be at least six deck hands—they did not say what deck hands, or whether they should be fully qualified able seamen or boys. As a matter of fact many steamers which were under the regulations of the Board of Trade only kept three able seamen and three ordinary seamen—that was, three boys—and in many instances the boys were first voyagers, who could not steer, and were not competent to keep a proper look-out. When such regulations were issued, the Department must have been entirely ignorant of the recommendations of the Manning Committee, which went thoroughly into the question. He had seen articles of agreement which did not contain a single word as to the number of firemen and stokers which should be carried. He desired to know if the right hon. Gentleman's Department would insist upon articles of agreement providing for the number of firemen to be carried, as well as the number of sailors. He knew something about the class of men who were engaged as firemen. When the ships got out to sea, two or three hands were taken from the stoke-hole and put into the engine-room to act as greasers—that was, to do engineers' work. There was a revival of the disturbance, and at the first foreign port at which the vessel arrived the men were taken before the Consul and thrown into prison. If the articles of agreement were properly drawn out—as they ought to be—the Board of Trade would see that the number of firemen was properly provided for, and the men would know perfectly well that they could insist on that number being employed. Another serious matter was the discharge of British seamen in foreign ports. The right hon. Gentleman had some power to check this, because the Merchant Shipping Act provided that Her Majesty's Consuls should have the right to withhold their sanction to the discharge of any crew at a foreign port unless the captain could give a proper reason for it. During the three years commencing 1897 and ending 1899 there were 92,000 sailors and firemen discharged from British ships at Rotterdam, Amsterdam, Hamburg, and Antwerp. Now these 92,000 men had to make their way to the United Kingdom, and in their places there were engaged 90,000 odd foreigners. They were foreigners who did not reside in this country, and who did not spend the money they earned on British ships in the ports of the United Kingdom. If the seamen were engaged and paid off here instead of on the Continent, at least two millions of money would be spent in British ports. That was a very serious matter, especially seeing that Her Majesty's Government had promised, when they came into office, to place some restriction on foreign immigration into this country. He did not want to be misunderstood on this matter. He was not complaining of foreigners who were resident in this country or who made the United Kingdom practically their home; but he was complaining of engaging 90,000 men in foreign ports and displacing 90,000 British seamen. He trusted that he would get satisfactory answers to all the questions he had asked.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. RITCHIE, Croydon) said that as regarded the latter part of the hon. Gentleman's speech, relating to the engagement of foreign seamen on board British ships, he could add nothing to what he had said on previous occasions. The question had been recently discussed in the House and between the shipowners themselves. There was no restriction whatever on the employment of foreign seamen on board British ships, although they much deplored the fact that so many were so engaged, and he would gladly see them replaced by British sailors. But he could not undertake to ask Parliament to legislate so as to compel British shipowners to employ seamen of a certain nationality.

MR. HAVELOCK WILSON said he did not ask the right hon. Gentleman to legislate. What he asked was that the right hon. Gentleman should instruct the Consuls to prevent the discharge of British seamen at British ports.

MR. RITCHIE said that when British seamen were discharged at foreign ports the law provided that they should be sent home. And that was all that the law could do. He was sorry that the hon. Member had used the expression that the P. and O. Company had been swindling and robbing their lascar seamen.

MR. HAVELOCK WILSON: I mean that.

MR. RITCHIE: The hon. Member says he means that. Then anything more unjustifiable could not have been alleged against the P. and O. Company, who maintained that it was quite entitled by law to engage lascars with the accommodation the P. and O. Company provided for them. It was, no doubt, a subject of considerable difficulty, but the matter was now in the hands of the Counsel of the Board of Trade, who were preparing a case in order to get the opinion of the High Court of Justice, and until that was obtained nothing more could be done. The hon. Member had said that the bad quality of the provisions was one of the reasons why so many British seamen deserted at foreign ports. While both the quantity and quality of the provisions served in the great liners were all that could be desired, he was not without the feeling that in some ships the provisions were not so good. But he was not quite sure that the cooking had not something to do with it.

MR. HAVELOCK WILSON said it would take a very good cook to cook good meals from provisions which cost 3s. 6d. for seven days.

MR. RITCHIE said the hon. Member must be aware that the scale of provisions had nothing to do with it. The scale in the articles of agreement was only a recommendation; it was not laid down as by law. It was a matter of agreement between the crew and the owners of the ship. The Board of Trade had no power in the matter. The skeleton scale which the hon. Member had quoted had been in existence since 1893, and it was proposed to issue a new one in 1901. The seamen had opportunities of complaining if they did not get proper food both as regarded quantity and quality. Their complaints when made were investigated, and if they were found to be justifiable an order was issued, and unless that order were complied with the master of the ship was liable.

MR. HAVELOCK WILSON said his complaint was not that the men did not get what they signed for. He complained that what they signed for was insufficient.

MR. RITCHIE Why do they sign for it?

MR. HAVELOCK WILSON: Because they cannot help themselves.

MR. RITCHIE said that if the men could not help themselves the Board of Trade had no power, as it was a matter of agreement. With regard to the action of the Consul to whom the hon. Member referred, he had received a report from him which he was bound to say he did not consider satisfactory. He had again communicated with the Consul, and if it turned out that he had acted ultra vires of course steps would be taken to deal with the matter.

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH said he desired to direct the attention of the House to a local matter which might, however, be of general interest, and regarding which he had given notice to the Vice-President of the Council that he intended mentioning it. It was, he thought, one of the grossest pieces of clerical intolerance which had occurred for a long time. The Vice-President was always asking for specific cases; but when he placed a case of a very serious and important character before him the other day the right hon. Gentleman traversed all the facts. In Holyhead there was a Church school which was overcrowded, and the school board made repeated applications to be allowed to build another board school, but all these applications had been refused. On 11th April, Canon Thomas, one of the managers of the Church school, called two pupil teachers—Roberts and Shone—before him. Roberts had been a pupil teacher for three years, and the custom was to sign the indentures when the pupil teacher began to teach. Roberts, however, was denied her indentures of apprenticeship for three years. Did the right hon. Gentleman deny that?

THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON EDUCATION (Sir J. GORST, Cambridge University): Yes, Sir.

MR ELLIS GRIFFITH: Was she denied them for two years?

SIR J. GORST assented.

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH: Then, for two years Roberts was a pupil teacher, and had not had her indentures signed. He should like to have an explanation of that from the right hon. Gentleman. The real explanation was that these pupils teachers were denied their right until they promised to attend church and Church Sunday-school. No other reason was suggested. On 11th April Canon Thomas called Roberts, whom he had been trying to proselytise for two years, before him, and asked, "Are you willing to go to church?" and she said, "No." Then he said, "I decline to sign your indentures, and will give you further time for consideration." He thought that was an iniquitous abuse of a public position. Subsequently Roberts left that school, though the right hon. Gentleman in his reply to a question seemed to imply that she was still in it. The right hon. Gentleman ordered an inquiry. An inspector was sent to the school, and—would the House believe it—at that inquiry the curate of the parish was present. He did ask the right hon. Gentleman to keep curates out of any inquiries he instituted into the management of these Church schools. In the particular school he was referring to, seven out of nine Nonconformist teachers went over to the Church, and he thought some light should be thrown on the methods which brought about that result. It might be said that he was taking the word of a pupil teacher against the word of the Canon, but he preferred the word of the pupil teacher. The right hon. Gentleman smiled, but he would give an instance of what Canon Thomas did. The choristers of the church had to sign a written promise not to sing solos in meeting-houses or Halls—meeting-houses with a small "m" and Halls with a large "H." Meeting-houses were, of course, the houses of God, and the man who was capable of such conduct as that should not have much reliance placed on his word. He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would inquire further why indentures were withheld from pupil teachers in the manner he described. He trusted that the right hon. Gentleman would not rely on the word of Canon Thomas, who was the accused person, and he was sure when he had all the facts before him he would administer a severe rebuke to the managers of the school.

SIR J. GORST said that no offence of which the Board of Education could take any cognisance had been disclosed.

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH: Why was an inquiry instituted?

SIR J. GORST said that the Board of Education had no control whatever with reference to the matters mentioned in the hon. Gentleman's question. The hon. Gentleman stated that repeated applications were made to Canon Thomas to sign the indentures in question, but there was not a word of truth in that. The school was conducted in a very liberal manner, because the hon. Gentleman himself admitted that there were nine Nonconformist pupil teachers in it, and the liberality displayed by Canon Thomas deserved more recognition than it had received.

MR. BRYNMOR JONES said no doubt the right hon. Gentleman was quite right in stating that he had no right to interfere in the particular matter mentioned; but what they desired to know was how long were the Government to continue giving grants out of public money to schools in which such injustice was permitted? What happened, according to the admission of the right hon. Gentleman himself?

SIR J. GORST: I made no admission.

MR. BRYNMOR JONES: The right hon. Gentleman admitted that the facts stated by my hon. friend were correct.

SIR J. GORST: Oh, no.

MR. BRYNMOR JONES: On what evidence does the right hon. Gentleman contradict my hon. friend's statement?

SIR J. GORST: On the Report of my inspector, the evidence of Canon Thomas, and the Reports sent to the Education Department.

MR. BRYNMOR JONES said he understood that Canon Thomas was not examined at the inquiry, but that he sent his curate. What were the Reports sent to the Education Department? They had not been laid before Parliament. On the main fact, however, the right hon. Gentleman did not contradict, on any evidence the House could accept, the statement of his hon. friend that proved injustice had been committed. Two pupil teachers were concerned; one had her indentures signed because she agreed to teach at Sunday-school, and the other had not because she would not agree to the terms laid down by Canon Thomas. He held that it was a great injustice, and it was no good for the right hon. Gentleman to turn round in a case like this and simply say he was not responsible for the management of the school. The right hon. Gentleman was responsible for the use to which the funds voted by the House was put. The right hon. Gentleman had not said what was the result of his investigation. Was the Canon at liberty to keep the girls dangling for two years for their indentures while all the time he was trying to proselytise them? And was any manager of a school entitled to keep them out of their apprenticeship indentures?

Question put, and agreed to.

Bill read a second time, and committed for To-morrow.

CHINA—ANTI-FOREIGN OUTBREAK—RECENT NEWS.

On the Motion for Adjournment:—

MR. BRODRICK: I may read a telegram which has just been received from the Tsung-li-Yamen and communicated to the Foreign Office by the Chinese Minister. It is dated 30th July and runs—

The Foreign Ministers and Chinese authorities are now on very friendly terms. The successful termination of the conference for their conveyance under escort to Tientsin is expected, but on account of the recommencement of hostilities at Tientsin code telegrams for transmission to the representatives are considered undesirable."

The following telegram has also been received from Consul Carles:—

QUESTIONS.

CHINA—ANTI-FOREIGN OUTBREAK—ADVANCE ON PEKING.

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the British relief force and the relief forces of any other Powers have yet started from Tientsin. May I also ask if the Government have any confirmation of the reports as to the battle near Tientsin?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): All the information the Government have received has been published.

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: Has the relief force yet started?

[No answer was given.]

CHINESE GOVERNMENT TO BE PERSONALLY RESPONSIBLE — STATEMENTS OF LI HUNG CHANG.

MR. BAINBRIDGE (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether, in view of the statement reported to have been made by Li Hung Chang to the effect that the lives of the Ambassadors in Peking would probably be sacrificed if the allied Powers advanced into that city, it is proposed to make any communication to the effect that he will be held personally responsible for their safety.

MR. BRODRICK: Her Majesty's Government have informed the Chinese Government that they will be held to be personally guilty if the members of the European Legations and other foreigners in Peking suffer injury. They do not consider that any useful purpose would be served by making a further communication of the character proposed.

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: Will the right hon. Gentleman say to whom the statement has been made? He said "the Chinese Government."

MR. PRITCHARD-MORGAN (Merthyr Tydvil): Have the Government received any confirmation of the statement made by Li Hung Chang on Saturday last that all foreigners had left Peking for Tientsin under escort on the 2nd inst. If that statement is found to be correct, will the allied forces return to Tientsin pending the arrival of the Europeans at that port?

MR. BRODRICK: No, Sir; we have no confirmation of the statement.

BRITISH FLEET IN CHINESE WATERS.

SIR EDWARD GOURLEY (Sunderland): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether all the vessels representing the British Navy now in Chinese waters are of suitable draft for the protection of the approaches to the Yang-tsze River from Woosung; will he also state if any and what type of craft are engaged in patrolling the river, and whether they are adapted for contending with armed forts; and will he be good enough to state what arrangements are being made for a reserve of coal and other stores likely to be needed during the continuance of hostilities.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. GOSCHEN, St. George's, Hanover Square): All vessels of the Fleet in Chinese waters are of suitable draught for the protection of the approaches to the Yang-tsze River. The heavy-draught ships must wait for certain tides. The question under what circumstances men-of-war on rivers would engage armed forts cannot be answered in the abstract, nor is it wise to discuss it. I am not prepared to state the arrangements for our reserves of naval stores at Hong Kong, but they have naturally received the most earnest attention of the Board of Admiralty.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR — PUBLICATION OF DESPATCHES.

CAPTAIN SINCLAIR (Forfarshire): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he can now state when the Government will publish the despatches relating to the military operations in South Africa which have taken place since the actions in February last at Spion Kop and at Stormberg.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): I hope that if things go well in South Africa the despatches will be published very soon.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): Will the right hon. Gentleman give a guarantee that they will be published as originally sent, and not edited for publication?

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

THE "RHODES-HAWKSLEY" CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, on 6th June, 1896, the cablegrams and letters known as the Rhodes-Hawksley correspondence were, at the Colonial Secretary's request, delivered to him by Mr. Hawksley, who wrote then a covering letter; whether copies of this correspondence have in accordance with practice been retained at the Colonial Office; and, if not, can he say why they have not been so retained; has Mr. Hawksley's covering letter been retained at the Colonial Office; and was there a subsequent correspondence between Mr. Hawksley and the Colonial Secretary; and, whether the Colonial Secretary will now publish the correspondence between himself and Messrs. Rhodes and Hawksley.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): I know of no correspondence which can properly be described as the Rhodes-Hawksley correspondence, and I have never had any correspondence with Mr. Rhodes in connection with the Jameson raid. I have repeatedly stated that copies of the cables which passed between England and South Africa were sent to me for confidential perusal and return, and were returned accordingly, no copies being kept. The majority of those cables were subsequently produced by the cable company to the Committee of Inquiry. The substance of the covering letter and my reply was stated to the Committee. Several letters passed subsequently between Mr. Hawksley and myself which I have offered to show to the Leader of the Opposition and to the right hon. Member for West Monmouthshire if they desire it. I see no reasons for publishing these letters.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Is there a "Hawksley-Chamberlain" correspondence or not?

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

DISCOVERY OF DOCUMENTS AT BLOEMFONTEIN AND PRETORIA SAID TO IMPLICATE M.P.'S.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON (Cumberland, Cockermouth): I wish to ask the Colonial Secretary a question of which I have not given him private notice, but which, I think, he will have no difficulty in answering—whether he has received any communication from the Members of Parliament mentioned as having written letters to the Transvaal, and, if so, whether he is prepared to make any statement with regard to the letters or the course he intends to take.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: No, Sir. Copies of the letters attributed to these Gentlemen were only sent to them last night, and I have not had time to receive an answer.

MR. DALZIEL (Kirkcaldy): In the event of the alleged writers refusing permission to publish the letters, as the allegation is a serious one, will the right hon. Gentleman give the public an opportunity of judging by himself undertaking the responsibility of publishing them ?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I have not given the Gentlemen an opportunity of refusing permission. All I have asked is whether they have any observations or explanations to make.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON: Will the right hon. Gentleman take an opportunity of publishing them at all ?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I told the House on the last occasion when I was asked a question on the subject that when I received replies from the gentlemen Her Majesty's Government would consider the matter.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Will you publish them to-morrow morning for us to discuss them ?

ENGLISH VOLUNTEERS JOINING IN SOUTH AFRICA—PASSAGE HOME.

MR. PHILIP STANHOPE (Burnley): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he is aware that a number of young men who went out to South Africa at their own expense to join some of the colonial forces, such as Brabant's Horse, the Kaffrarian Rifles, or the Border Horse, are not in a position to defray the cost of the return journey to England; and whether, at the conclusion of the war, arrangements will be made to give these men, who have been serving their country, a free return passage home.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): The suggestion will be considered.

TYPHOID FEVER—STATISTICS.

SIR WALTER FOSTER (Derbyshire, Ilkeston): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he can give the number of deaths from typhoid fever and the number of admissions for that disease at Bloemfontein for the weeks ending 29th June, 6th July, and 13th July; and whether he can state the total number of admissions for typhoid fever among the forces in South Africa up to the end of June, and the number of deaths from that disease.

*MR. WYNDHAM: These figures are not yet available. I will arrange that they shall be communicated to the hon. Member when they are.

ARMY MEDICAL CORPS—REINFORCEMENTS.

SIR WALTER FOSTER: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he can state the strength of the reinforcement of trained men of the Royal Army Medical Corps which it has been recently decided to send out to South Africa.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The strength of the reinforcements is 300.

PROBABLE DURATION OF THE WAR.

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he is in a position to give the House any information as to the probable end of the war in the Transvaal.

*MR. WYNDHAM: My right hon. friend asks me to answer this question. I must, however, decline to prophesy.

MR. DALZIEL: Did not the hon. Gentleman say yesterday it would be over "in a few weeks" ?

*MR. WYNDHAM: I may have dropped that phrase. It would be my estimate, but then my estimate is not of any value.

WARLIKE STORES PURCHASED ABROAD.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he can now state the total amount of the payments made, or to be made, for stores purchased abroad for the South African campaign up to 31st December, 1899.

*Mr. WYNDHAM: I must refer the honourable Member to the answer which I gave him on the 3rd of August.† If he wishes to have the information I will arrange for it to be communicated to him unofficially.—In answer to a further question Mr. Wyndham said he would give the totals now and the details at some later date, when they could be communicated without injury to the public interest.

CAPTURES OF BOER GUNS AND RIFLES.

Mr. BAINBRIDGE: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he can state the quantity of arms of all descriptions which have been taken from the Boers since the commencement of hostilities; and whether the Commander-in-Chief has been asked to report at the conclusion of the war as to the number of Boer guns which may then be unaccounted for.

*Mr. WYNDHAM: We have no information of the total number of rifles captured. We have no conclusive information as to the number of guns captured. In regard to the second paragraph, the matter may be left to the discretion of the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa.

HEROISM IN THE FIELD—PUBLICATION OF REPORTS.

General LAURIE (Pembroke and Haverfordwest): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether, as the despatches from the generals commanding in the field in South Africa, which the Government consider it is inexpedient to publish, should in accordance with precedent contain the names of officers and men brought to notice for heroism and gallantry in action, and, as delay in making such notice public materially weakens this as a reward for such service, it would be possible as a recognition to those still serving, and as a gratification to the relatives of those who have fallen, that extracts from these despatches could at once be published giving the names of those thus distinguished as well as the particulars of the services rendered.

*Mr. WYNDHAM: It would not be easy to separate the passages in which officers' names are mentioned from the context, but we have every hope that it may be found possible to publish the despatches before long.

FORAGE RATIONS.

General LAURIE: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the daily forage ration allowed to cavalry and artillery officers in South Africa was ever fixed at 6 lb. oats and 4 lb. hay per horse; if so, how long this regulation was in force, and under whose advice it was so established; whether any protests as to the insufficiency of this allowance, which is less than half the forage ration issued in this country, were made by officers commanding cavalry regiments and batteries of artillery or by the generals under whose command they served; whether any change has been made in the quantity allowed per horse; and whether it is recognised that horses picketed in the open air, and more particularly in a changeable climate, require a larger quantity of food than horses kept in stables.

*Mr. WYNDHAM: The daily ration fixed by general orders in South Africa is 12 lb. grain or 2 lb. hay in lieu of each pound of grain up to a maximum of 8 lb. Nothing is known of the ration alluded to in the question or of any protest against it. The only change made was an addition of 2 lb. of grain and hay at depôts near the coast when sufficient quantities are procurable. The supplies available at the base are ample.

General LAURIE: Has the hon. Gentleman's attention been called to a letter in The Times, dated Cape Town, 15th June, in which it is stated that while this short ration was being issued, forage was actually being burned?

*Mr. WYNDHAM: The ration depends not so much on the amount laid down in the regulations, but on the possibility of supplying it during these rapid marches.

ESTATE OF DECEASED SOLDIERS—INFORMATION FOR RELATIVES.

Mr. DALZIEL: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War what steps are taken to inform relatives of deceased soldiers in South Africa of the amount of pay that may be due at time of decease; and whether the desirability of increased publicity will be considered by the War Office.

† See page 634 of this volume.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Communications of death are made at once to the next of kin in all cases in which the address is known, and they are told to apply to the War Office for anything which may be due; the amount of the estate as soon as known is distributed. Unclaimed estates of deceased soldiers are published in the Monthly Army Lists, and at the depôts, and in one or two weekly papers best adapted for the purpose.

SETTLEMENT AFTER WAR—VIEWS OF CANADA AND AUSTRALASIA.

MR. FABER (York): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, considering the part taken by Canada and Australia in the South African War, it is proposed to ascertain the views of the Governments of those countries in regard to the settlement and government of the Transvaal and Orange State when the war is over.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I have already made myself acquainted with the views of the colonies of Canada and Australasia in regard to the main points of the future settlement, and Her Majesty's Government are in complete accordance with them as to the necessity for annexation, the establishment of a Government supported by military force, with the ultimate expectation of an extension to both colonies of representative self-government.

THE SUPPLEMENTAL WAR LOAN.

MR. COHEN (Islington, E.): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will explain the reason for the early closing this morning of the list of subscriptions for the issue of Exchequer bonds.

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Sir M. HICKS BEACH, Bristol, W.): The list was closed as soon as it was ascertained that the bonds offered had been amply covered, because I was advised that this course would, on the whole, cause less disappointment than a very small allotment in proportion to the amount subscribed for. I may say that a part of the issue was already taken. Before settling what the issue should be, I had endeavoured to ascertain by the usual confidential inquiries whether the terms which I felt justified in offering would be likely to attract subscribers here. I received such very moderate encouragement that I accepted an offer made to me by the leading Anglo-American houses in London to place half the issue in the United States on the terms at which I had decided to offer it here. I did this not only on financial grounds. But financially it assured the success of the issue; and it had another great advantage. Last Thursday the reserve of the Bank of England stood at the lowest point at which it has stood at this time of the year for seven years; and I was advised by those best competent to judge that great relief might be afforded here by the movement of gold from the United States, if a large part of this loan were taken there. I regret any disappointment caused to those who were shut out by early closing; but I hope it may be to some extent mitigated by a consideration of the very important point to which I have just referred.

EXCISE DUTY—REBATES ON IRISH TOBACCO FOR SOUTH AFRICAN TROOPS.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is aware of complaints being made that the usual rebate of excise duty was not allowed on consigments of tobacco sent from Dublin to the troops in South Africa; whether he can explain the reason; and will he see that the amount of the rebate claimed is refunded.

*SIR M. HICKS BEACH: No complaints have been received as to the non-payment of drawback on British manufactured tobacco exported, except with regard to certain shipments by one firm, the particulars of which have been communicated to me by the hon. Member. Before any drawback can be paid the law requires that the shipment and exportation of the goods shall be duly certified by the export officer. In the case now under reply the tobacco was removed under bond by a firm of licensed tobacco manufacturers at Dublin to Southampton, for shipment for the troops in South Africa, but it was not produced to the officers of Customs at Southampton prior to shipment at that port, and the Board of Customs were consequently unable to sanction payment of drawback. They have informed the firm that on receipt of local evidence from Southampton as to the shipment of the case and of an official certificate of the landing of the tobacco in South Africa, they would further consider the question. No such evidence or certificate has yet been produced, but the Board are awaiting a further communication from the firm.

IMPERIAL YEOMANRY — DELAYED DELIVERY OF SUPPLIES AND CLOTHING.

MR. H. S. FOSTER (Suffolk, Lowestoft): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War who is responsible for the clothing and feeding of the Imperial Yeomanry at the front, and if he can state why the men of Paget's Horse (Imperial Yeomanry) were early in July engaged on convoy duty in a state of semi-starvation, between Smid's Drift and Daniel's Kraal, their daily rations consisting of a small piece of bread and no biscuits, whilst they were taking up convoys of provisions to Sir Charles Warren; and who is responsible for the arrangements under which these men find it impossible to cash postal orders issued from the London post offices and sent out to them, and which it was stated in London could be cashed at any camp post office with the forces, the result being that the men were unable to purchase the abundant food supplies of the rebels and were unable to obtain proper supplies from their own forces.

The following questions also appeared on the Paper:—

MR. H. S. FOSTER: To ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he is now able to state who is responsible for the continuous non-delivery of warm clothing and other comforts, sent out in quantities weekly since the departure of the Imperial Yeomanry, and extending therefore over some months; and will any opportunity be afforded to persons in this country of giving evidence as to the quantity of such comforts sent out weekly by them, and not one of which has been delivered.

MR. H. S. FOSTER: To ask the Under Secretary of State for War who is responsible for the men of Paget's Horse (Imperial Yeomanry) being in a state of rags in the month of July; whether they have yet been supplied with proper clothing, having regard to the severity of the nights in South Africa; and whether, as the men of this and other Volunteer corps gave up their occupations and comforts in order to answer the invitation of the Government, searching inquiry will be made to ascertain how far the hardships to which they have been subjected could have been avoided or mitigated by those responsible.

*MR. WYNDHAM: If my hon. friend will permit me I will reply to his three questions together. There is no official information of the want of food or clothing mentioned; the responsibility for getting food and clothing to the front rests with the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa and his staff. In regard to the delivery of comforts I have already explained that an inquiry is being made in South Africa. Food and clothing naturally take precedence of comforts. The General Post Office made arrangements that postal orders issued in London should be cashed at any field post office in South Africa. If there is any evidence of failure in these arrangements I shall be happy to make inquiry. The general questions raised by the hon. Member—namely, whether our arrangements for transport and supply can be improved, and whether they have been turned to the best account during the present war—are of the highest importance and will form the subject of careful inquiry when the war is over.

CAVALRY CARBINES.

COLONEL WELBY (Taunton): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he is aware of the disadvantage in which our cavalry in South Africa have been placed by the imperfect sighting and deficient range of their carbines as compared with the rifles used by the Boers; whether these carbines are still being manufactured; and whether it is under consideration to re-arm the cavalry with a weapon of full accuracy and range, even if it necessitates their carrying a long rifle in place of the carbine.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The question of substituting rifles for carbines cannot be taken up until full reports have been received from South Africa. Such reports have not yet been received, and, for the present, carbines are still being manufactured. The question of sighting has been reported on in this country, and new tests are now under consideration.

ARMY CONTRACTS—HUNGARIAN FLOUR FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

SIR HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central); I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office whether contracts for flour have been recently placed in Hungary for South Africa; and if he will adhere to his policy of giving a preference to home industries to the utmost possible extent in providing the Army with its supplies.

*THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS, Birmingham, S.): No contracts for the purchase of flour have been recently placed in Hungary by the War Department. My hon. and gallant friend may rest assured that no stores will be purchased outside the United Kingdom that can be as readily and satisfactorily obtained at home.

VOLUNTEER MEDICAL OFFICERS AT THE FRONT—COLONIAL ALLOWANCES.

MR. THORNTON (Clapham): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the 400 Volunteer medical officers serving in South Africa are to be placed on the same financial footing as members of the Army Medical Corps, who receive colonial allowances of 1s. 6d. per day in the Cape Colony, and a larger gratuity of over 4s. a day both in the Orange River Colony and the Transvaal.

I beg also to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether, as the civil surgeons of the Army do not enjoy colonial allowance, they yet receive the same aggregate amount of pay as other medical men under Lord Roberts's command; and, if an inequality exists, whether he will endeavour to rectify it.

*MR. WYNDHAM: In reply to the two questions asked by the hon. Member about the pay of civil medical practitioners serving in South Africa, I may say that the position of these gentlemen differs in one important particular from that of officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps. The latter receive rates of pay which are calculated with reference to the general services which they have to perform at all times and in all parts of the world. The conditions of the present war are, however, unusual as regards the specially high cost of living in South Africa, and it was therefore thought reasonable that special colonial allowances should be granted to them to enable them to meet this extra expense. The case of the civil surgeons is quite different. They made a special contract for service in South Africa during the present war, and there is therefore nothing unforeseen in the conditions of their service which we feel called upon to meet by an alteration in their favour in the terms of the contract. As a matter of fact they receive higher emoluments than many of the officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps. My attention has been called to the fact that civil veterinary surgeons are receiving colonial allowances. That is so, the reason being that they are paid at the rate of Army veterinary surgeons, and not at a special rate calculated with a view to the present war.

SEPARATION ALLOWANCES.

MR. MOSS (Denbighshire, E.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if his attention has been called to the case of Jane Edith Owen, wife of 2481, Private J. T. Owen, 2nd Battalion Scots Guards, now on active service with Her Majesty's forces in South Africa; and whether he is aware that before enlisting Private Owen was promised that his wife should receive, during his absence, a sum of 1s. 1d. per day separation allowance and 2d. a day for his child; that this promise was confirmed by a letter to Mrs. Owen, dated 24th March, 1900, from Captain King, of the Scots Guards; and that the only sum now received by Mrs. Owen and her child is a sum of 6d. per day allotted to her by her husband before leaving for the war.

*MR. WYNDHAM: An inquiry is being made into this case.

ORANGE RIVER COLONY—PENNY POSTAGE.

MR. EVELYN CECIL (Hertfordshire, Hertford): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether the Post Office has yet come to any decision with regard to the establishment of penny postage to the Orange River Colony, especially in view of the surcharges which have been frequently made on poor recipients of letters; and whether it would be possible to establish penny postage with the Transvaal so soon as its annexation is proclaimed.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. HANBURY, Preston): No decision has yet been come to. Although the 2½d. rate of postage must, for the present, remain applicable to the letters of the general public, those sent from or to the British forces serving in South Africa are specially exempted from surcharges.

MILITIA BATTALIONS AT BULFORD CAMP.

SIR J. FERGUSSON (Manchester, N.E.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the Militia battalions now encamped at Bulford have been in the last six months repeatedly moved, or have received orders to move, which have been at the last moment countermanded, thus entailing much trouble and expense to individuals; whether it is intended to move these battalions repeatedly in the next few months, and whether such frequent changes were and are unavoidable on public grounds; and if the Secretary of State will consider whether they are calculated to discourage recruiting and re-engagements.

*MR. WYNDHAM: My information does not confirm the statement that there have been repeated moves, or that orders have been given and countermanded at the last moment; but a certain number of moves have been necessary in order that the ground might be cleared for building huts. I have explained to the House on former occasions that the deficiencies in our barrack accommodation, which we are spending a great deal of money to remedy, render such shiftings unavoidable.

SIR HOWARD VINCENT: Can the hon. Gentleman say how long the Militia are to be kept up?

*MR. WYNDHAM: There are several questions down as to that. I cannot give the date of their disembodiment.

MILITIA EMBODIMENT—DURATION.

SIR EDWARD GOURLEY: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether it is intended to disband those regiments of Militia which were embodied in November last before those that have only been out since May; and can he state how long the embodiment is likely to continue, inasmuch as employers of labour are anxious to know whether they are likely to get their old hands back again for the winter, or whether they will have to fill up permanently the places of the men who are now embodied.

*MR. WYNDHAM: I have already explained that it is impossible at the present time to state when disembodiment will take place, but the battalions first embodied will have a strong claim to be the first released.

MR. HEDDERWICK (Wick Burghs): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he will state how long it is intended to keep the Militia Artillery regiments, which were embodied at the beginning of May, under canvas; how long the authorities mean to keep them on active service; and, if they are to be retained on active service after 30th September, what the War Office means to do with them.

*MR. WYNDHAM: I can add nothing to the reply to a similar question put by the hon. Member for the Montgomery District on the 3rd instant.† The Militia will not be kept in tents after the camping reason is over. It is not possible at the present moment to say when the Militia will be disembodied.

OFFICERS' MESSES AND QUARTERS—FURNISHING SCHEME.

SIR HOWARD VINCENT: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if any progress has been made with the furnishing of officers' mess and married men's quarters in the United Kingdom, so as to decrease the cost of home transport and the difficulty of moving officers and regiments from one station to another.

† See page 637 of this volume.

*Mr. WYNDHAM: The question of furnishing officers' messes and quarters is one factor in the general problem of reducing officers' expenses, which, as I have explained, must be treated as a whole. Some progress has already been made in dealing with it, and the hon. Member may be assured that the matter will receive attention during the autumn.

CHELSEA BARRACKS — OFFICERS' DRESSING ROOMS.

Lieut.-Colonel PRYCE-JONES (Montgomery Boroughs): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the dressing room and sanitary arrangements provided for officers of the Militia and Volunteers at the school of instruction at Chelsea Barracks have been improved; and, if not, can he say when it is proposed to carry out these improvements.

*Mr. WYNDHAM: No complaint has been received as to the accommodation at Chelsea Barracks for the officers referred to. As I pointed out in reply to my hon. and gallant friend on the 10th July last year, any representation on the subject should be made through the General Officer Commanding Home District; and pending the receipt of such representations action cannot be taken.

Lieut.-Colonel PRYCE-JONES: Is not the hon. Gentleman aware that I had the honour of making a complaint?

*Mr. WYNDHAM: It should have been made to the General Officer Commanding the Home District. This House is the court of appeal—it cannot be made a court of first instance to deal with minor details.

Lieut.-Colonel PRYCE-JONES: I made written complaint to the General Officer Commanding the Home District, and he promised to do something in the matter.

*Mr. WYNDHAM: My information is that no complaint has been received.

Lieut.-Colonel PRYCE-JONES: As a matter of fact, I made one.

RESERVISTS AND THE PARLIAMENTARY VOTES.

Mr. GOULDING (Wiltshire, Devizes): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether, in the event of a General Election, railway warrants will be issued to men doing duty with the colours in the United Kingdom, in order that they may record their votes.

*Mr. WYNDHAM: In the event of a General Election the question will be considered.

SALISBURY PLAIN — LIGHTNING FATALITY TO A VOLUNTEER—COMPENSATION.

Lieut.-Colonel PRYCE-JONES: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War what compensation will be paid to the representatives of a member of the 1st Volunteer Battalion, the South Wales Borderers, recently encamped on Salisbury Plain, who was killed by lightning on 28th July; and whether he will consider the propriety of extending the present regulations applicable in this case, and also in all similar cases where death results in performance of their military duties, and when subject to military law.

*Mr. WYNDHAM: The regulations do not admit of the grant of compensation in such cases even to Regular troops; but, as I have informed the House, this subject is now under consideration.

VOLUNTEER CAMPS ON SALISBURY PLAIN — TRANSPORT ARRANGEMENTS, ETC.

Lieut.-Colonel PRYCE-JONES: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether better transport arrangements in connection with camps on Salisbury Plain will be effected by another year, as inconvenience and loss have resulted to Volunteer regiments this summer.

I beg further to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he is aware of the inadequacy of the provision for Volunteers on Salisbury Plain for washing purposes; and if steps will be taken to remedy this grievance in future.

I beg also to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he can make any general announcement with regard to the intentions of the Government as regards their future policy towards Volunteers, e.g., respecting regimental camp allowances, brigade camp allowances, pay and allowances to officers and men, capitation and other grants, and minimum and maximum duration, and whether optional or obligatory of camps in future.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Any changes in the existing regulations and provisions for Volunteers and their camps must necessarily be based on the experience derived from the camps now being held. The information in our possession does not lead to the conclusion that the arrangements made this year have, as the hon. Member supposes, been inadequate; and even if it were possible to frame a scheme before the camp trainings are complete, and to report on them to hand, the proper time for presenting it would be when asking Parliamentary sanction for the Estimates of the year. I need hardly remind my hon. and gallant friend that the arrangements for the camps this year are for this year only.

DUKE OF YORK'S SCHOOL—MEDICAL OFFICER.

SIR J. FERGUSSON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the medical officer of the Duke of York's School has been re-appointed at the expiration of his term of appointment, and whether he has been recommended for such extension by the Director General of the Army Medical Department and the Commandant of the Duke of York's School.

*MR. WYNDHAM: The medical officer of the Duke of York's School was re-appointed in May, 1899. The recommendation for such extension was made by the Commander-in-Chief after a special inquiry into this officer's efficiency.—In answer to a further question the hon. Gentleman said he would not be justified in going into the facts upon what the Commander-in-Chief made his recommendation, but he did appoint a special inquiry to ascertain whether the medical officer was efficient or not, and the conclusion arrived at by those charged with the duty was that he was perfectly efficient.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Was it referred to the Board of Patronage of which we have heard so much?

[No answer was given.]

PENSIONS—CASE OF JOSEPH BLACK.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he is aware that Joseph Black enlisted at Dumfries in 1855, and as sergeant volunteered at Aldershot when serving there in 1858 to the 11th Hussars, and served continuously in that regiment till 1871, and that he served again in the 5th Battalion King's Own Scottish Borderers from 1873 till 1894, being colour sergeant for the last fifteen years; whether he is aware that Black's pension on discharge is 8½d. per diem by reason of the last period only of his service being computed; whether Black has represented to the War Office that he engaged for the last period on the assurance given him by H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, the late Commander-in-Chief, through his Colonel, Sir G. C. Walker, K.C.B., that the whole of his service should be reckoned for pension on discharge, and if inquiries have been made as to the accuracy of that representation; and whether 8½d. a day is, according to War Office Regulations, the proper recompense for so long a service.

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: This case has been fully explained to the House on a previous occasion. The man received the pension to which he was entitled under regulations which apply to his service, and no one had any power to make any such promise as that referred to.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Is the hon. Gentleman aware that the promise was distinctly made by the Duke of Cambridge?

*MR. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS: I am not aware of that.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Then you ought to be.

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

SALISBURY PLAIN—MILITARY USE OF CULTIVATED LAND.

LIEUT.-COLONEL PRYCE-JONES: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether it is intended to make use of the cultivated ground on Salisbury Plain for military purposes, inasmuch as during the last month there has been no room for brigade drills at Bulford Camp, although certain battalions lost two whole days, out of twelve working days, in travelling to and from Salisbury Plain, and that the musketry shooting could have been done nearer home and at less cost to the public.

*MR. WYNDHAM: A scheme has been formed, and is being carried out, by which all cultivated land on Salisbury Plain belonging to the Government, outside certain areas, will revert to grass. But to carry out such a scheme in accordance with the terms of the leases and without injury to tenants naturally takes a considerable time.

VOLUNTEER, MILITIA, AND YEOMANRY STATISTICS.

LIEUT.-COLONEL PRYCE-JONES: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he will issue a Return, after the close of the Volunteer year, giving the following information, namely, the acreage, rateable value, and population of each county in England, Scotland, and Wales, respectively, and the number of efficient members of the Yeomanry and Volunteers, respectively, on the rolls at the end of the last Volunteer year, and also on the rolls at the end of the current Volunteer year; also of the Militia, those resident in each county, those non-resident; also (for Yeomanry and Volunteers) columns giving particulars of regiments represented in South Africa, and distinguishing those which have earned the special grant, together with the percentage of attendance of their enrolled strength; also stating the financial position of each corps, and enumerating their assets, such as ranges, drill halls, machine guns, transport, and other accessories in different columns.

*MR. WYNDHAM: Information on some of these subjects is being collected, and I hope to be able to issue a Return which will contain a part at least of what the hon. and gallant Member asks for.

RESERVE REGIMENTS—PROMOTIONS.

COLONEL SANDYS (Lancashire, Bootle): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he is aware that, in some of the reserve battalions, majors in the Army have been put on duty as subalterns; that in the reserve battalions seniority is not regarded, and the latest joined officers are put over the heads of officers senior to them in the Army; and that in the reserve battalions officers and men from different regiments are mixed up indiscriminately in the same reserve battalion, to the detriment of regimental esprit; and if there is any reason why there should not be a reserve battalion for each regiment of the Line, formed exclusively from officers, non-commissioned officers and men who have served together in that regiment before.

*MR. WYNDHAM: As there were hardly any officers of the rank of subaltern in the reserve, majors have been obliged to do duty as subalterns. Seniority in the reserve battalions within each rank depends on the date of joining such battalion for duty. Officers and men are not mixed up indiscriminately; the various territorial corps have been grouped to form battalions, as the unequal numbers joining from the several corps have rendered the formation of a reserve battalion for each regiment impossible.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL BOILERS.

SIR FORTESCUE FLANNERY (Yorkshire, W.R., Shipley): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty if he can now conveniently inform the House as to the constitution of the Committee to inquire into the boilers of Her Majesty's ships, and whether he can also inform the House of the terms of reference to the Committee.

MR. GOSCHEN: I am composing the Committee as follows. It will consist of seven members:—The President, Vice-Admiral Sir Compton Domvile, who has had under his command fleets of ships with both cylindrical and water-tube boilers, and will have them again; Mr. List, the superintending engineer of the Castle Company; Mr. Bain, the superintending engineer of the Cunard Line;

Mr. Milton, chief engineer surveyor of Lloyd's Registry of Shipping (this gentleman sat on the former Admiralty Committee on Boilers in 1892); Professor Kennedy, formerly Professor of Engineering at University College, now an engineer in large practice, with special experience in the trials of engines and boilers; sixthly, an engineer of the Royal Navy holding the rank of inspector of machinery. As regards the seventh member of the Committee, I am still engaged in making the selection. The instructions to the Committee will be to the following effect, though I do not pledge myself to the precise wording of the reference:—To ascertain practically and experimentally the relative advantages and disadvantages of the Belleville boiler for naval purposes as compared with the cylindrical boiler; to investigate the causes of the defects which have occurred in these boilers and in the machinery of ships fitted with them, and to report how far they are preventable either by modifications of details or by difference of treatment, or how far they are inherent in the system. Also to report generally on the suitability of the propelling and auxiliary machinery fitted in recent war vessels, and to offer any suggestions for improvement, stating at the same time the effect as regards weight and space of any alterations proposed. To report on the advantages and disadvantages of the Niclausse and Babcock and Wilcox boilers compared with the Belleville as far as the means at the disposal of the Committee permit, and also to report whether any other description of boiler has sufficient advantages over the Belleville or the other two types mentioned, as a boiler for large cruisers and battleships, to make it advisable to fit it in any of Her Majesty's ships for trial. For the purpose of making direct experiments between ships fitted with Belleville and cylindrical boilers respectively, the "Hyacinth," fitted with Belleville boilers, will be placed at the disposal of the Committee. A cruiser of similar type fitted with cylindrical boilers will also be placed at the disposal of the Committee when required for the purpose of comparison. For the investigation of defects, copies of the reports of all the defects of machinery and boilers which have occurred during the naval manœuvres will be placed before the Committee, and they will be able to inspect the ships specially commissioned for the manœuvres. On the arrival of the "Europa" from Australia it is proposed that the investigation into the causes of her high coal expenditure should be conducted under the directions of the Committee, and that she should afterwards be put through such trials as they may think necessary. Information on any special points connected with the behaviour of the boilers or machinery of water-tube boiler ships on ordinary peace service which the Committee may desire to have can be obtained from any of Her Majesty's ships in commission, and opportunities can be taken when the Channel Squadron is in any of the home ports to examine the boilers and machinery of the "Diadem," "Arrogant," and "Furious," which have Belleville boilers, and the "Pactolus," which is fitted with the Blechynden boilers. The "Pelorus," fitted with Normand boilers, which has recently returned from three years continuous service in the Channel Squadron and at the Cape of Good Hope, and the "Powerful" will also be available for examination during their refits. The "Sharpshooter," fitted with Belleville boilers without economisers, the "Seagull," fitted with Niclausse, and the "Sheldrake" with Babcock and Wilcox boilers, will be employed in training stokers, and will be available for examination, and, if necessary, for any comparative experiments between these boilers that the Committee may wish to make. It is particularly desired that any conclusions the Committee may arrive at should be supported by experimental proof as far as possible, and that they should propose any further experiments they think necessary for this purpose.

Sir FORTESCUE FLANNERY: May I ask whether the words in the earlier part of the reference—namely, "causes of failure in the boilers"—includes examination as to the sufficiency of the engineers and stokers who attend them. Should not that naturally be in the reference to the Committee? Is it not the intention of the Admiralty to inquire into the question of the personnel?

Mr. GOSCHEN: No, Sir. It would not be naturally in the reference to the Committee. Of course, if there are any defects discovered which are due to the causes the hon. Member suggests, the Committee will be at perfect liberty to state them.

MR. C. H. WILSON (Hull, W.): Have any of the engineers of the companies named had any experience with water-tube boilers?

MR. GOSCHEN: No, Sir; neither in the Castle Line nor in the Cunard Line. On the other hand, the naval engineer and inspector of machinery will have had experience of the water-tube boiler.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): Will the professor of engineering have had experience?

MR. GOSCHEN: The professor of engineering is, I believe, looked up to as a great authority on all these questions, and has examined them scientifically. I believe he has already been engaged in trials with regard to waste of water and matters of that kind which will make his assistance particularly valuable.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Will the Report of the Committee deal with the manœuvres of last year as well as this?

MR. GOSCHEN: No, Sir. I do not think their labours ought to be extended beyond the limits I have laid down. Otherwise it might be ages before they report. My hon. friend will see that the work I have cut out for them is very considerable.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: Is it intended to invite the hon. Member for Gateshead to serve on this Committee?

MR. GOSCHEN: No, Sir. I have not proposed to place any Member of Parliament on the Committee. If the hon. Member for Gateshead were placed on the Committee, other Members of Parliament would be equally entitled to a place. I look upon this as a practical scientific investigation, to be kept entirely apart from anything which has passed in this House. This will leave hon. Members of this House real liberty in discussing the Report of the Committee.

SUBMARINE BOATS.

SIR FORTESCUE FLANNERY: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty if he can see his way to state what investigations are being made in this country into the question of submarine boats; and whether it is the intention of the Admiralty to proceed with the building of any experimental submarine ship as is now being done in the case of at least two foreign navies.

MR. GOSCHEN: I must refer the hon. Gentleman to my previous statements in the House in answer to the hon. Gentlemen the Member for West Newington and the Member for Bolton on the 6th April and 3rd May last.†

STEAM COAL FOR THE NAVY.

MR. HEDDERWICK: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Amiralty if he will state the quantity of naval steam coal at present stored at ports in the United Kingdom and in British coaling stations abroad; and whether such coal is protected by covering sheds or otherwise from the disintegrating and wasting effects of atmospheric action.

MR. GOSCHEN: It is not in the interests of the public service to give the information asked for in the first paragraph of the question. Coal at foreign stations is generally protected by covering sheds, but not in the home ports where the turn-over is rapid.

INDIA—FAMINE STATISTICS.

SIR MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGGREE (Bethnal Green, N.E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India if he has any further information about the rainfall in the districts affected by the famine in India, and whether the prospects of the ensuing crops are improved; and if he has received from Lord Curzon any reports regarding his inspection last week of the affected provinces in Western India.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Lord G. HAMILTON, Middlesex, Ealing): The Government of India telegraph to-day as follows—

"Famine. Very decided improvement in last ten days through sudden opportune renewed advance of the monsoon. The rain which has fallen is ample for present agricultural requirements in Gujarat, also in the greater part of Rajputana and Central India. Sowings being actively prosecuted so far as scarcity of plough bullocks permits. If present favourable conditions continue considerable autumn crops will be secured and tension will relax."

On the 6th August the Governor of Bombay reported that—

> "Rainfall continues in affected area. Agricultural operations are progressing satisfactorily in Gujarat, Panch Mahals, and Kathiawar. Elsewhere agricultural prospects are encouraging. Numbers on relief works and gratuitous relief increased."

I have not yet received from the Viceroy any special reports regarding what he has witnessed during the inspections he is now making of the famine districts.

IRRIGATION AND WATER STORAGE WORKS.

MR. SOUTTAR (Dumfriesshire): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether any proposals have been made or projects prepared for conservation by dams or reservoirs of the waters of the Nerbudda and Tapti rivers, the monsoon floods of which are now rushing to the sea through the Central Provinces and Gujerat, where the people and cattle have been perishing for want of water; and if no such plans have as yet been proposed, will the Indian Government consider whether it may even yet be practicable to store and utilise some portion of the volume of water which will otherwise be largely wasted.

LORD G. HAMILTON: If the hon. Gentleman wishes it, I will consult the Indian Government upon this matter; but so far as I know, neither of these rivers could be associated with large and effective irrigation works.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY—REPAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT ADVANCES.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether, in the transactions whereby the property and interests of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company were taken over and acquired by the Government of India, account was taken of the debt due to the State in respect of sums advanced from India's general revenues to make up the dividends guaranteed to the company or for other purposes; and seeing that the aggregate total of these advances to the three remaining guaranteed companies (including the Great Indian Peninsula) still amounts to over Rx.35,000,000, can he state what means, if any, there are by which the Indian revenues may recover the amount of those advances.

LORD G. HAMILTON: Under contract of 30th November, 1870, between the Secretary of State for India in Council and the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, the company gave up its right to more than half the surplus profits in the event of advances of interest being entirely repaid, and in return the Government abandoned all claim to repayment of such advances in any other manner. Similar arrangements were made with the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India and Madras Railway Companies.

SUPREME EXECUTIVE COUNCIL IN INDIA—PENSIONS.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether he can state when and whence the proposals originated to the effect that the Law and Finance Members of the Supreme Executive Council in India are each to have pensions of £750 after their five years of office terminate, and whether the present incumbents of those posts are to receive these new pensions; and by what authority has this permanent addition to Indian expenditure been imposed, and will Parliament have an opportunity to consider the proposal for these new pensions.

LORD G. HAMILTON: No resolution to the effect suggested has been passed, though the question of adding to the pecuniary attractions of these two appointments for persons not in the permanent employ of the Government has been under consideration. Should it be deemed advisable to take the action indicated, the Secretary of State in Council will be guided by the requirements of the statutes defining his powers in respect of Indian expenditure.

COOPER'S HILL ENGINEERS.

MR. KIMBER (Wandsworth): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether his attention has been called to a Despatch No. 15, P. W., dated 28–1–90, from the Government of India, dealing with matters to be brought before the Select Committee of the House of Commons, and specially affecting the claims of the Cooper's Hill Engineers; and whether the evidence therein contained was laid before that Committee; and, if not, why it was withheld.

LORD G. HAMILTON: The question as to the selection of Papers to be laid before the Select Committee in 1890 was, I believe, very carefully considered by my predecessor in office, and all Papers bearing on the subject under discussion which it was thought could be published without prejudice to the interest of the public service were produced. I am not prepared, at this distance of time, to reopen the question.

MR. KIMBER: Was this particular despatch laid before the Committee?

LORD G. HAMILTON was understood to answer in the affirmative.

SIR MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGGREE: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether any alterations have been made recently in the regulations for the admission of students to the Royal Engineering College, Cooper's Hill; and, if so, will he state the particulars regarding the same, and also whether they tend to impose any restrictions on the entrance of students from India to the college, and on their passing through it to the several departments of public service for which they have been hitherto eligible.

LORD G. HAMILTON: The college was established to supply from this country officers for the Public Works Departments in India. Colleges were also set up in India to supply native officers for the same departments, and at these colleges no Europeans were allowed to be trained. Recently there was a rush of Indian students to the Cooper's Hill College. Finding that in the past few years one native student had on the average got into the Public Works Department through Cooper's Hill, I fixed for the future two as the number to be annually competed for by them. Thus the main object is maintained for which the college was established—namely, the annual provision of European officers for these departments, whilst at the same time no restriction is imposed upon the limit of Indian students.

SEA FISHERIES BILL COMMITTEE.

SIR J. COLOMB (Great Yarmouth): On behalf of the hon. Member for Suffolk, Lowestoft Division, I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade why the evidence taken by the Select Committee on the Sea Fisheries Bill has not been circulated with the Report, seeing that the evidence was completed nearly a month ago, and was printed and circulated amongst the members of the Committee from day to day.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. RITCHIE, Croydon): I have no doubt that the evidence will be circulated in due course. I have no control over the printing, of course, but I am told there has been no unusual delay. After the evidence is completed it has to be indexed.

SEA FISHERIES—INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE.

MR. BUCHANAN (Aberdeenshire, E.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the attention of the Government has been directed to the Report of the Select Committee on the Sea Fisheries Bill, whose first recommendation is that no effort should be spared to arrange for international treatment of the subject of sea fisheries, and especially for the regulation of the North Sea area; and whether the Government will initiate negotiations for the assembling of a conference of the North Sea Powers for this purpose.

MR. RITCHIE: This matter is receiving consideration, but further knowledge is necessary before negotiations can be opened for a conference.

SEA FISHERIES—FUTURE LEGISLATION.

MR. C. H. WILSON: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he is aware of the falling off in the North Sea fisheries, and seeing that in their special Report the Select Committee to whom the Sea Fisheries Bill was referred stated that the subject of the diminution of the fish supply was a pressing one, and that the situation was becoming worse, and that no effort ought to be spared to arrange for international treatment of the subject generally, and especially for regulation of the North Sea area; and to provide for the adequate equipment of the Government Departments in charge of the subject, so that they might effectively pursue scientific investigation, and ascertain what has been done either in the way of scientific research or in the matter of practical legislation by other inquirers and by other countries, with the view of determining whether any, and if so what, legislation may be desirable to effect the objects of the Bill, whether he will press upon the Government legislative action, as the diminution in the supply of this article of food is of national importance.—In putting this question the hon. Member said: I am aware the question has to some extent been answered in the reply to the hon. Member for East Aberdeenshire; but I wish particularly to ask the President of the Board of Trade if he is aware of the falling off in the North Sea fisheries; if he knows that many of the fishing vessels are now being laid up in the ports of Hull and Grimsby, thereby causing great distress, which may possibly increase in the near future; and if he will consider the importance of dealing with this matter by legislation, which has been too long deferred.

Mr. RITCHIE: I am not aware whether the hon. Gentleman's latter allegation is correct, but I do know there has been some falling off in the fishing industry in the North Sea.

Mr. C. H. WILSON: What do the Government propose to do?

Mr. RITCHIE: It is much too early for the Government to state what it proposes to do. There has not been time to consider the evidence and the Report of the Committee.

Mr. C. H. WILSON: How many years has this question been before the Government?

PARIS EXHIBITION—SUGGESTED EXPERT COMMISSION IN BRITISH COMMERCIAL INTERESTS.

Mr. BAINBRIDGE: Is the Government aware that the German Government have decided to appoint a Special Commission of nine experts, with a view to bringing before the manufacturers of that country improvements in machinery displayed at the Paris Exhibition, and will he consider the desirability of advising the British Government to take a similar course?

Mr. RITCHIE: I have no knowledge of the facts stated in the question.

DOG QUARANTINE REGULATIONS.

Mr. THOMAS BAYLEY (Derbyshire, Chesterfield): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether the quarantine regulations issued by the Board of Agriculture compel a dog owner to keep his dog muzzled day and night indoor and outdoor for six months; whether he is aware that, in carrying out these regulations, the police have entered houses at all hours of the day and night; and have instructions been given to the police, and, if so, will he state what the instructions are.

Mr. RITCHIE (for Mr. Long): My right hon. friend asks me to say that the regulations made by the Board of Agriculture ordinarily require that an imported dog shall be kept muzzled when in any public place or in contact with other dogs, but not at any other time. Where, however, a dog has been illegally landed or removed from the prescribed place of detention the dog is required to be muzzled at all times, except whilst being fed, until satisfactory arrangements for its detention have been made. It is the duty of the police to execute and enforce the Orders of the Board of Agriculture, but it rests with the various police authorities to take the necessary steps for this purpose, and the Board have issued no instructions on the subject. The answer to the hon. Member's second question is in the negative.

WELSHPOOL CATTLE MARKETS.

Lieut.-Colonel PRYCE-JONES: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture if the restrictions with regard to swine and markets in the district of Weshpool have been withdrawn; if not, whether he can give any information as to the likelihood of an early relaxation of the present restrictions.

Mr. Ritchie (for Mr. Long): My right hon. friend desires me to say that the restrictions referred to have not yet been withdrawn. The improved position of this district as regards swine fever leads him to hope that he may be before long in a position to relax them; although it is impossible to intimate beforehand the particular date when the restrictions can be withdrawn.

KENT COAL FIELDS.

Mr. FLOWER (Bradford, W.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has any information that a seam of steam navigation coal has been found at Dover which on analysis has been pronounced equal to the best Welsh steam coal; if any report thereon has been or will be made by the Government Inspector of Mines; and if it would be possible to secure this coal for the service of the British Fleet.

The UNDER SECRETARY of STATE to the HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. Jesse Collings, Birmingham, Bordesley): I have been asked by my right hon. friend to answer this question. It is a matter of common knowledge that a company has been seeking coal in the neighbourhood of Dover, and that seams have been found. The Government have no information as to the quality of the coal.

THE BROWN INSTITUTION—INOCULATIONS WITH RABIES.

Mr. MOSS: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his attention has been called to a statement by the superintendent of the Brown Institution, that the inoculations with rabies performed in that institution were of no use except for the purpose of compiling statistics; and whether, seeing that these inoculations with rabies inflict suffering on a number of animals, he will take the necessary steps to prevent their continuance in that institution in future.

Mr. JESSE COLLINGS: The superintendent of the Brown Institution states that the question does not accurately represent any opinions expressed by him. He considers that the inoculations referred to afford the only means of determining the existence of rabies in a suspected animal.

MAIDSTONE PRISON WARDERS.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the warders, some retired and some still serving in Maidstone prison, who were in the prison service when the control of the prisons was taken over by the Home Office from the county authorities, were guaranteed by agreement that they would, when retiring, receive a pension equal to two-thirds of their salaries; whether this arrangement was kept in the cases of all old service officers who retired up to two years ago, when Mr. Bishop was given a pension of £61 10s. for twenty-five years service; was the arrangement departed from one year ago when Mr. Searle, who had twenty-six years service, and received only £43 pension; whether he is aware that Mr. Broderick, who has served over twenty-four years in the prison service and twenty-one years in the Army, is about retiring, and is only to be allowed £36 10s. 4d.; can he say why these officers should not be paid according to the agreement and on the scale given to the other officers; and will he see that Mr. Searle and Mr. Broderick and all remaining old officers in Maidstone are pensioned at the higher rate.

Mr. JESSE COLLINGS: There was no agreement such as is suggested in the question. There are considerable legal difficulties affecting these and similar cases, and the whole question is now under the consideration of the Departments concerned.

HAPTON VALLEY COLLIERY.

Mr. PHILIP STANHOPE: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received and considered a Report from the district inspector of mines with regard to the testing of tubs at the Hapton Colliery on 21st June.

Mr. JESSE COLLINGS: The hon. Member intends, as I understand, to refer to Hapton Valley Colliery. The inspector mentions in one of his Reports, which has been before the Secretary of State, that the tubs in that colliery were tested on the 21st June. The matter forms part of the larger question into which the Secretary of State has promised to institute an inquiry.

MONTGOMERYSHIRE WORKHOUSES.

LIEUT.-COLONEL PRYCE-JONES: I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether the inquiries into the possibility of the reduction of the number of workhouses in the county of Montgomery have been completed; if not, when does he hope to complete the same.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. CHAPLIN, Lincolnshire, Sleaford): Inquiries have been made upon this subject, but no representations by any of the local authorities, or by the ratepayers interested, have been received by the Local Government Board on the matter.

VACCINATION EXPENSES.

LIEUT.-COLONEL PRYCE-JONES: I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board if he will state what have been the total expenses of the guardians of the unions of Machynlleth, Caersws, Forden, and Llanfyllin, respectively, in the county of Montgomery, in respect of public vaccination in each of the three years ending 31st December, 1897, 31st December, 1898, and 31st December, 1899; what have been the amounts of the fees to public vaccinators and vaccination officers; and what have been the expenses of prosecutions under the Vaccination Acts in each of the three years named in the said unions.

MR. CHAPLIN: I replied to three precisely similar questions relating to other unions only yesterday, and I have nothing to add to the answers I gave then. I will furnish my hon. friend with a copy of that reply, if he desires it.

VACCINATION STATISTICS.

SIR WALTER FOSTER: I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether he can state the number of certificates of successful primary vaccination received by the vaccination officers during the year 1899, as compared with 1898, and the number of such certificates received for the first six months of this year as compared with the similar period of the years 1898 and 1899.

MR. CHAPLIN: The number of certificates of successful primary vaccination received by vaccination officers during 1899 was 669,349, as compared with 500,314 during 1898, being an increase of 169,035, or 33.8 per cent. I have not received Returns as to the number of such certificates during the first six months of the present year.

DISSENTING MINISTERS AND THE PARLIAMENTARY FRANCHISE.

MR. BAINBRIDGE: I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether Her Majesty's Government will consider favourably the question of introducing legislation to enable a Dissenting minister to be placed upon the register on taking up his residence in any locality, thus giving him the privilege already possessed by the clergy of the Established Church.

MR. CHAPLIN: I understand the question of the hon. Member to relate to Parliamentary registration; but this is not a matter coming within the province of the Local Government Board.

CATERHAM AND LEAVESDEN ASYLUMS.

SIR MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGGREE: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is aware that the managers of the Metropolitan Asylums Board have recently reduced the normal accommodation for patients at Caterham and Leavesden Asylums; that in consequence of this reduction, and owing to the Metropolitan Asylums Board having otherwise failed to make adequate provision for the reception of imbeciles, many such cases in Bethnal Green have been detained in the workhouse there; and that such cases include a number of boys and girls to whose interests detention in the workhouse is injurious; and whether, under these circumstances, he proposes to take any steps to remedy this state of things.

MR. CHAPLIN: Perhaps my hon. friend will allow me to answer this question. The reply to the first paragraph is in the affirmative. I am informed that there are six children in the Bethnal Green workhouse who should be removed to an imbecile asylum if there were vacancies for them. The asylum managers are alive to the necessity of further provision being made for imbeciles, and pending the acquisition of the Sutton schools they are making temporary provision for imbecile children.

CIVIL SERVICE—TEMPORARY COPYISTS.

MR. SKEWES-COX (Surrey, Kingston): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether, in addition to the old class of writers, the ordinary temporary copyists who were registered and employed by the Civil Service Commissioners between September, 1870, and August, 1871, although they had not belonged to the old class of writers mentioned by the Secretary on the 5th of April last, are allowed on appointment to permanent positions to reckon all their temporary service towards pensions under the Treasury Minute of the 1st June, 1882.

MR. HANBURY: There were no "copyists" employed before the Order in Council of 19th August, 1871. There were certain writers registered for general service between 4th June, 1870, and 19th August, 1871, and such of them who fulfilled the conditions of Treasury Minute of June, 1882, would count all their writer service for pension; otherwise they would only count half of it.

PILLAR AND WALL LETTER BOXES IN THE CITY.

MR. COHEN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, when it is expected that the undivided pillar and wall boxes in the E.C. District will be divided so as to avoid the necessity for letters from these boxes being carried first to St. Martin's-le-Grand and then to Mount Pleasant, and the delay resulting from such transmission.

MR. HANBURY: Divided street letter boxes are being provided in the Eastern Central District as rapidly as the contractors, who have had the order for a considerable time, can supply them. It is hoped that the supply will be completed by the middle of October. Meanwhile collections from the undivided boxes are being dealt with specially in order to prevent delay as far as possible.

BANK HOLIDAY DUTY IN THE POST OFFICE.

MR. STEADMAN (Tower Hamlets, Stepney): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether the members of the old first class of countermen and telegraphists, who are entitled under the Tweedmouth scheme to payment for work performed on bank holidays, are in future to be compelled to accept a corresponding number of hours off during the winter months; and whether such work should not be paid for in accordance with the decision of the Departmental Committee, as is at present the custom.

MR. HANBURY: The arrangement referred to by the hon. Member forms part of a scheme by which the main part of the annual holiday of the whole staff would be taken between 1st March and 31st October, instead of being spread over the whole year as now; but it is made on condition that this generally beneficial scheme shall only take effect with the practically unanimous consent of the staff affected.

GAERWEN TELEGRAPH FACILITIES.

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH (Anglesey): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether the Anglesey Standing Joint Committee and the Anglesey County Council have called his attention to the lack of telegraph facilities in Gaerwen, Anglesey; and whether, seeing that the London and North Western Railway station, which is a considerable distance from the village of Gaerwen, is the only place within the district from which telegrams can be sent, and taking into account the interests of the public and the difficulty of communicating with the police in the Gaerwen district, he will take steps to place telegraph facilities within reach of the inhabitants of Gaerwen without requiring any financial security.

MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster General is unable to trace any application from the local authorities referred to, but his attention was drawn by the hon. Member himself a month or two ago to the need of a telegraph office at Gaerwen, and on the 19th ult. the terms on which such an office could be opened were stated. The estimated telegraph business is too small to justify the opening of the office without guarantee. The railway station, where telegrams are received for despatch, is slightly under a mile from the village. There is no delivery from the station.

TRAMORE PIER.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he is yet in a position to say if the Lords of the Treasury will make the necessary grant for the erection of a pier at Tramore for the landing of fish; and, if so, what amount the Treasury will grant, and when the work will commence.

Mr. HANBURY: I have not yet received a Report upon the application in question.

KIRKCALDY AND SINCLAIRTOWN STATIONS—SHUNTING ARRANGEMENTS.

Mr. DALZIEL: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether, in view of the danger to the travelling public resulting from the absence of proper shunting accommodation at Kirkcaldy and Sinclairtown stations, and the accidents which have already resulted therefrom, he will take immediate steps to compel the North British Railway Company to provide increased accommodation.

Mr. RITCHIE: The Board of Trade have no powers of compulsion, but they have communicated with the company several times on this subject. As recently as 20th July they addressed a letter to the general manager and received a reply intimating that the matter was still under consideration. The company shall be pressed to arrive at some conclusion.

BUTE PROCURATOR FISCAL.

Mr. CALDWELL (Lanarkshire, Mid): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether the procurator fiscal for the county of Bute received his appointment on the condition that he would devote his whole time to the duties of his office, and that he would not directly or indirectly engage in private practice as a law agent; whether he is aware that the procurator fiscal has appointed two deputes, who, besides being depute procurator fiscal, carry on the business of law agents within the procurator fiscal's office, and that one of these deputes, who is not a qualified law agent, appeared for the procurator fiscal in the public interest at the Bute County Licensing Court, whilst the other depute appeared on behalf of an applicant for a licence in Arran, the procurator fiscal himself being absent for weeks from the county as adjutant of a Volunteer corps for which he received payment; and whether this is in accordance with the terms of procurator fiscal's appointment.

The LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. A. Graham Murray, Buteshire): The procurator fiscal for the county of Bute is restricted from private practice, but may hold public offices with the approval of the sheriff. He has two deputes. They, as is invariably the case with deputes, are not restricted. In the licensing case referred to in the question I am informed that neither of the deputes appeared in the Justice of Peace Court as depute sheriff's procurator fiscal. Neither depute holds a commission in this court. It is the case that the procurator fiscal is adjutant of a Volunteer corps with the approval of the sheriff. I am informed that it is not the case that he has been absent from the county for weeks or any one week in that capacity.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, DUBLIN.

Mr. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Board of Works have not provided the necessary temporary additional accommodation in certain departments of the Royal College of Science, Dublin, and that the department of physics is inconvenienced by the want of accommodation, although there is plenty of space available; and whether it is intended to carry out the recommendation to put up a shed to provide room for apparatus and other requisites.

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. G. W. Balfour, Leeds, Central): The subject of providing temporary additional accommodation for the physical laboratory of the Royal College of Science is under the consideration of the Board of Works and the Department of Agriculture. There is no foundation for the suggestion that the Board of Works have failed to provide additional temporary accommodation in other departments of the institution; no proposal to this effect has been made to the Board.

LAND CASES IN KERRY.

MR. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that Mr. Warden, of Sneem, county Kerry, has served a writ on a tenant named Patrick Sullivan, Kealariddig, for £54 3s. 2d., and that the amount of the writ is calculated on the old rent of £18 per year, including old arrears, although the judicial rent is only £14 per year; whether he is aware that Patrick Sullivan was proceeded against a short time since before the county court judge of Kerry, by whom an order was made that Patrick Sullivan should pay the amount of the process by instalments; and whether, seeing that Patrick Sullivan has since punctually complied with the order of the Court by payment of the instalments, he will state what steps the Government will take to prevent Mr. Warden from executing under the writ for the recovery of money which is already being paid by order of the county court judge by instalments.

MR. G. W. BALFOUR: The facts are as stated in the first paragraph, but the judicial rent was only fixed this year. I have no information as to the second paragraph, and, as regards the third paragraph, the Government have no power to take any action such as suggested. I may, however, inform the hon. Member that the amount of the writ has been paid in full.

BELFAST WATER COMMISSION.

MR. SAMUEL YOUNG (Cavan, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the recent awards made by Mr. Ryan, arbitrator under the Commissioners for Public Works in Ireland, in respect of the lands taken from the farmers by the Belfast Water Commissioners, near Carrickfergus, and to the difference between the amount of his awards and the awards by the juries on traverse at the county of Antrim assizes at Belfast; whether he is aware that in the case of a farmer called Legg the arbitrator awarded £20 only, and on traverse the jury at the assizes increased his award to £167, with £15 for costs; and, having regard to the dissatisfaction caused among the farmers by the awards of this arbitrator, whether he will consider the desirability of having the appointment of this arbitrator reconsidered and a man of larger experience appointed in his place.

MR. HANBURY: The Commissioners of Public Works are not responsible for the awards of the arbitrator, but only for his appointment. It is an essential feature of his post that he should occupy an independent position. The Board have no power under the circumstances to revoke the appointment.

BALLYGAWLEY POST OFFICE.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he will explain why it has been decided to discontinue the post office at Ballygawley, which has been established for fifteen years, and is as much required for the public convenience now as hitherto; and seeing that the present postmaster, Mr. Bernard Kelly, who took up the office in succession to his mother, and has held it for ten years, when he got the appointment made at the request of the postal authorities structural alterations in the premises at a cost of £25, the Postmaster General, if the office is to be closed, will consider the question of refunding this amount to Mr. Kelly.

MR. HANBURY: There are two post offices at places named Ballygawley in Ireland; but in neither case is Kelly the name of the sub-postmaster. The Postmaster General is not aware of any proposal for abolishing either of these offices. If the hon. Member will communicate to the Postmaster General the full particulars on which the question is based, inquiry shall be made on the subject.

PARCELS POSTMEN'S GRIEVANCES.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether the Postmaster General will reconsider the question of relieving the postmen in Bray, Kingstown, and Howth of the loads of parcels which they are now obliged to carry, by providing hand-carts or other vehicles for their conveyance and delivery.

MR. HANBURY: As stated in the reply given to the hon. Member on the 2nd instant, care is always taken to provide against any postmen being overloaded; and he may rest assured that when it becomes necessary to provide handcarts at the places he mentions they will be supplied.

MARLBOROUGH STREET, DUBLIN, TRAINING COLLEGE—SPRINGTOWN EVENING SCHOOL.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Commissioners of National Education (Ireland) received a memorandum from the teachers at present at the course of hand and eye training in Marlborough Street, requesting an increase in the personal allowance of 3s. per day given them while in Dublin attending the lectures; and, if so, what action have the Board taken on the matter; have the Board acknowledged the receipt of that memorandum, or communicated their decision on it to those teachers; and can he state whether the teachers who attended a course of lectures in 1883 to prepare them for the office of organiser received 7s. 6d. as personal allowance per diem, and have the Commissioners refused to grant even 3s. per day to the majority of Dublin teachers attending the course; and, seeing that those teachers have sacrificed their annual holidays, and in many cases have provided substitutes in their schools at their own expense, to forward the new scheme of the Board without any prospect of personal gain, whether he will recommend that proper allowance is made in all cases.

I beg also to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Springtown Evening School, county Longford, Roll No. 8470, has been recognised by the Commissioners of National Education for the six months ending 30th April, 1900, and that the emoluments of the teacher, as set forth by National Board's circular, were to consist of salary, results fees, and customs and excise grant; and whether, seeing that, although the inspector examined and reported favourably on above-named evening school, the teacher has only received salary as yet at the rate of £1 per month, any further sum will be paid him in lieu of abolished results fees and the customs grant; and, if so, when will the payments be made.

MR. G. W. BALFOUR: These questions were only placed on the Paper this morning, and there has not been sufficient time to obtain reports upon them to-day from Dublin. The desired information has been called for, and will be privately communicated to the hon. Member when received.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: Will it be possible to give an answer to-morrow?

MR. G. W. BALFOUR: I cannot say.

MITCHELSTOWN UNION MAGISTRACY.

MR. WILLIAM ABRAHAM (Cork Co., N.E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if his attention has been called to a resolution adopted unanimously by the guardians of Mitchelstown Union on the 2nd instant, respecting the public inconvenience caused by the want of magistrates in the petty sessions district, and to the fact that only one justice resides in the town, and he is disqualified to adjudicate in certain cases; and whether he will cause inquiry to be made with a view to remedying the inconvenience complained of.

MR. G. W. BALFOUR: I have seen the resolution referred to. There are four justices, I understand, already resident in or near Michelstown, and I am not aware that any inconvenience has been caused to the public, as alleged in the question. The Lieutenant of the county will consider the names of any suitable gentleman who may be recommended to him for appointment to the Commission of the Peace in the district.

RAILWAY EXTENSION TO BELMULLET.

MR. CRILLY (Mayo, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he has received a resolution adopted by the Belmullet Rural District Council, on 21st July, in which a resolution previously passed by the Mayo County Council was unanimously endorsed, calling on the Government to construct a line of railway to Belmullet for the purpose of developing the industries and resources of the localities through which the proposed railway would pass; if he knows from personal acquaintance with the districts around Belmullet that such a railway would be of advantage to the commercial and industrial needs of the people of that union, as well as to the people of the neighbouring unions; and if, seeing the want of adequate means of transit in the unions in question, he can hold out any hope that the Government will proceed in the direction indicated by the resolutions of the Belmullet Rural District Council and the Mayo County Council.

MR. G. W. BALFOUR: The resolution referred to has been received, but there is no money available for the purpose, and I am not in a position to hold out any hopes on the subject. I may remind the hon. Member that the question of railway communication to Belmullet was carefully considered some years ago, and that the Government, while unable to approve of the application of funds for the construction of a railway, have established steamship communication between Belmullet and Sligo.

THE GRAND CANAL COMPANY.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he has seen a letter of Mr. Kirkland, manager of the Grand Canal Company, in which he states that, although his company pays over £2,000 a year in tolls to the Government through the Irish Board of Works, they refuse to reduce the tolls or afford facilities for carrying on their trade with Limerick; that in the year 1898, the towing-path on the Government Canal between Killaloe and Limerick was so flooded that the Grand Canal Company's traffic was stopped, and that their boat cargoes had to be sent by rail from Killaloe to Limerick; also, that the crane at Banagher recently broke down, killing a man; and also that the Grand Canal Company have been charged tolls on as much as five tons per boat more cargo than they got freight for themselves; and whether he will inquire into the truth of these complaints, and see that such a reduction of tolls is made and such facilities of trading is afforded where the Government have control (notably under the Board of Works) as will enable the Grand Canal Company's trading competition to be maintained in the public interest.

MR. HANBURY: This question only appeared on the Notice Paper to-day, and I have been unable to obtain any information with regard to it.

SNEEM PIER.

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state how long it is since Mr. Warden, of Sneem, county Kerry, signified his intention of erecting the store at Sneem Pier; what steps have been taken by Mr. Warden to carry out his intentions; and, if nothing has been done, will the Government make a representation to Mr. Warden to allow others who are prepared to do so to erect this store for the protection of traders' goods.

MR. G. W. BALFOUR: I am not aware that Mr. Warden stated it was his intention to erect a store at Sneem Pier, but in July, 1899, he informed the Congested Districts Board that it was the intention of the owners to build a store at their convenience. No representations have since been received from Mr. Warden, but the Board will communicate with him in the matter.

THE PARLIAMENTARY REGISTER.

MR. M'KENNA (Monmouthshire, N.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he will introduce a Bill to render operative at the earliest possible date the register of electors which in the ordinary course will be completed in the month of October, and come into operation on the 1st January next.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I think the hon. Gentleman is very sanguine if he thinks that on the day of the Committee stage of the Appropriation Bill we could introduce a Registration Bill.

SUGAR BOUNTIES.

*MR. CHARLES M'ARTHUR (Liverpool, Exchange): I beg to ask the First

Lord of the Treasury whether, in view of the continued effect of the Continental bounty system upon the British sugar refining industry, as evidenced by the closing of two more important refineries at Liverpool during the past year, Her Majesty's Government intend to take any decisive measures for the relief of that industry from a system which is calculated to result in its extinction.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: Before I can give any answer about the decisive measures of which my hon. friend speaks in his question, I ought to have some clear idea of what those measures are.

*Mr. CHARLES M'ARTHUR: I should like to ask whether the Government will consider the advisability of entering into negotiations with bounty-giving States with a view to prohibiting the use of bounty-fed sugar under a penal clause.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: I have hopes that all the chief bounty-giving countries —France, Germany, Russia, and Austria —will abandon the bounties; but I would not like to pledge myself to that.

COLONIAL STOCK BILL [Lords].

As amended, considered.

New clause—

"In the application of this Act to Scotland the words 'Trusts (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1884,' shall be substituted for the words 'Trustee Act, 1893,' where those words first occur in Section 2; and the restrictions mentioned at the end of the said section shall apply."—(The Lord Advocate.) —brought up, and read the first time.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be read a second time."

Mr. CALDWELL (Lanarkshire, Mid) said be pointed out when the Bill was in Committee that it would not apply to Scotland. The Lord Advocate had now introduced a new clause to the effect that it should apply to Scotland. There were some obvious advantages in that. It was quite true that the Court of Session had power to approve of Colonial investments, and in all probability that court would include those sanctioned by the Treasury. But it was necessary at present that application should be made to the Court of Session in every individual case. The effect of making this measure applicable to Scotland would be that a special application to the Court of Session would not be necessary in every case in respect of these Colonial investments. The Chancellor of the Exchequer made a statement the other day from which it appeared that he intended that there should be some procedure whereby stockholders should have the advantage of the jurisdiction of the English courts in certain eventualities.

Scotch law was different from English law, and he suggested that the Chancellor of the Exchequer should make the conditions of the procedure cover the jurisdiction of the Scotch courts in matters where Scotch stockholders were concerned. At the same time, he had no objection whatever to the new clause.

Question put, and agreed to.

Clause read a second time, and added.

An Amendment made.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read the third time."

MR. CALDWELL said he wished to say a few words on the Bill, because it marked a new departure in the legislation of this country. Hitherto Parliament had passed Acts of Parliament authorising trustees to invest certain moneys in Colonial stocks in so far as the trustees were not limited by the trust deed, but in all cases the Acts had defined the conditions. Those conditions were such as that authorising investments in debenture stock where for ten years immediately preceding a dividend of not less than 3 per cent. had been paid on the ordinary stock; but in every case the conditions, whatever they might be, were set forth in the Act of Parliament. This Bill, however, authorised the investment of trust money in certain Colonial stocks which had observed certain conditions. Those conditions were not laid down in the Bill, but they were conditions which the Treasury, in some way not defined, might prescribe. They might be prescribed without any Parliamentary supervision or control, it not even being necessary to lay the conditions before Parliament. The Treasury was also empowered to alter the conditions from time to time. There were several inconvenient practical results of this new legislation. The Imperial Treasury and the self-governing colonies would be brought into direct contact with respect to the most delicate of all questions—financial questions. Their interests would be somewhat divergent. On the one side the Imperial Treasury would be anxious to protect the safety of the investor, and on the other hand the colonists would be anxious to borrow money as cheaply as they could to keep up the value of their existing stock, and in order to put new stocks in the market on as favourable terms as they possibly could. Thus there might be a danger of friction arising between the mother country and the colonies owing to this new relationship that was established between them. But the Bill went much further. By the Bill the Treasury assumed a new responsibility. At present the Treasury had nothing whatever to do with what trustees might invest in, but under the Bill the Treasury assumed an undoubted responsibility in selecting particular Colonial stocks which trustees might invest in. Then the Treasury fixed the conditions which a colony was to observe as regards new stock, and the Treasury might alter these conditions from time to time in the interest either of the investor or of the colony. As regarded investments so sanctioned by the Treasury, it would be difficult for the Treasury or the nation as a whole to avoid a certain responsibility if any complication should arise between the holders of such stock and the colony, as the Bill conferred on the Treasury power to make conditions, and these conditions were not set forth in the Bill. They were, of course, on the Third Reading quite entitled to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conditions he proposed to make. The right hon. Gentleman certainly mentioned some on the Second Reading, and possibly he had reconsidered these conditions and would be able to give to the House more authoritatively what the final decision was as to these investments outside the United Kingdom. Two conditions would be required. One was that a certain fund should be settled in this country, and certain parties should be responsible in this country, so that the jurisdiction of the courts would be available in the event of any question arising between the holder of the stock and the colony. The other condition which would have to be made was that the colony should not tax that particular stock in such a way as to alter its value. It was obvious that in this instance the colonies had taken advantage of having sent troops to South Africa with the view of securing favourable terms for themselves in regard to these financial questions. The colonies had everything to gain by this Bill. They naturally would have a larger supply of capital, and eventually there must be cheaper money in the colonies. But what might be the result in this country of such powers for investment in the colonies? Money in this country obviously was likely to become somewhat dearer. That would be an advantage no doubt to the investing public at home, but certainly not an advantage to the borrowing public who required money for the purposes of industries at home. It might, indeed, be doubted how far a too ready flow of money was an advantage even to a colony. In passing this Bill the House was undoubtedly conferring very considerable advantages on the colonies. They were getting practically all the advantages belonging to the mother country, while, on the other hand, they did not bear any of the burdens or responsibilities which attended even their own colony as part of the Empire. Take, for instance, the case of Canada, which this Bill was calculated specially to benefit. Canada contributed nothing whatever for the Navy, although if Canada were an independent nation she would require a Navy of her own. Canada contributed nothing for the British Army, although if an independent nation she would require to protect her frontier against the United States. Canada was receiving the benefit of our naval and military expenditure while practically contributing nothing to the Imperial revenue. This, of course, increased the risk of friction between this country and the United States. He thought the time had come when we were quite entitled to raise the question whether the colonies were to reap all the advantages, while we were not to receive anything in return. It was very much to be regretted that a Bill of this importance should be passed through the House at this late period of the session. The House ought to have had an opportunity of discussing it at an earlier period.

*SIR ALBERT ROLLIT (Islington, S.) thanked the Chancellor of the Exchequer for having enlarged the discretion of trustees as to the investments in which money under their control might be safely and securely deposited. He could not agree with the hon. Member for Mid Lanark that the benefits were all in favour of the colonies. Let them admit that there was a concession to colonial opinion, he thought most wisely on Imperial grounds, but on the other hand our country was benefited by the larger range of investments, and by the very safe security given owing to the industrial development in many of our colonies. The right hon. Gentleman had given powers to trustees which would be exercised with discretion under rules and regulations which would be framed. He had thus added a new outlet for British capital. He admitted that this was a new departure, but it was a wise one. Such changes were not only desirable in respect of the colonies, but also in a very large degree at home. The principle on which this Bill was based was one he should like the right hon. Gentleman to consider in reference to investments in our own country with the view of enlarging the sphere in one or two ways. He passed to another point which interested himself officially, as Chancellor of the Exchequer—namely, investments authorised to be made in respect of savings bank money so far as surplus deposits were concerned. The right hon. Gentleman had attempted very properly to enlarge his own means of investment this session, and although his Bill had met with opposition in some quarters, he thought that, keeping in view the changes that must take place in 1903, it was a matter that demanded careful consideration before any step was taken affecting such large and wide interests as those of the depositors in savings banks and the great economic principles on which these institutions were founded. Not only should the right hon. Gentleman seek a larger discretion for himself in dealing with these moneys, but he should extend the powers of trustees of savings banks in respect of investments they might make, especially in the large field of municipal, school board, and other similar local securities. In fact, the whole subject of trustee investments was ripe for review and re-consideration, and he hoped that at no distant date it would be taken up by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and that the House would have an opportunity of expressing an opinion upon it. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had shown himself ready to listen to the representations which were made to him with respect to the Savings Banks Bill, by referring it and his (Sir Albert's) own Bill to a Select Committee with power to take evidence. He expressed the hope that if the right hon.

Gentleman proposed to deal with the subject by Bill in future he would again feel at liberty to send it for examination by a Select Committee. But he hoped the Chancellor of the Exchequer, before any measure was brought in in future, if any measure must be introduced, would either appoint a Royal Commission, which he thought would be the best mode of dealing with so large and important a subject, or introduce the Bill simply with the object of referring it to a Select Committee for consideration.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I should not like the suggestion of the hon. Baronet to go forth without an expression of doubt from one who, like himself, is interested in finance. I think it would be a most dangerous thing for the Chancellor of the Exchequer to ask for, or the House to grant, enlarged powers of investment in regard to funds of savings banks. Those funds are very large, and they are payable at call. It is very doubtful whether there is anything like an adequate reserve; there certainly is no cash reserve; and if the Chancellor of the Exchequer were enabled to put his savings bank money into second-class securities—I will not say bad securities—it would be a very dangerous increase of the risk which already too much surrounds savings banks. I was very desirous to make this remark, so that the statement of the hon. Baronet should not go forth as though unquestioned by the House. I think there is a certain danger in this Bill also. It practically gives an artificial character to colonial investments, endowing them with a sacredness and a "gilt-edged" character which they did not before possess: it enables trustees to invest in them. The result will be, I am afraid, to encourage the colonies to go on borrowing even more than they have done. I have very grave doubts as to the propriety of the course pursued by a great many of our colonies in the exercise of their borrowing powers. This Bill will undoubtedly encourage them to borrow more, and that, I think, is a very great danger to the colonies, and it is a danger which we undertake to share with them by this Bill. We have entered into partnership with the colonies, become guarantors of their solvency, and to that extent have encouraged them in a course which in many cases is very likely to lead to serious embarrassment in future.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) BILL.

Lords Amendments considered.

Lords Amendment—

—agreed to.

Lords Amendment—

"In page 2, line 3, at end, to insert 'Provided that where a person receiving and paying rent in respect of the same holding would not, if the principal Act or this Act had not passed, have been entitled to deduct more than half the poor rate from the rent paid by him, the reduction or deduction which may be made under the said sub-section (4), either as extended or not, shall be calculated on the assumption that the occupier was entitled to deduct half the standard amount for poor rate in the standard financial year'"

—read a second time.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said Amendment."

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.) submitted that this Amendment constituted a breach of the privileges of the House of Commons. It was a well understood and established practice that the House of Lords could not alter in the slightest degree any matter dealing with public moneys. This Amendment altered the variation of the poor rate which the tenant was liable to pay, and therefore could not be entertained by the House. It would tax the patience and ability of any man of ordinary intelligence to understand the general effect of the proviso in question, encased as it was with limitations and references to sections and subsections in three or four different Acts of Parliament. This much, however, was clear, that a variation of the payment of the poor rate was designed and must be carried out by the Amendment here made, and therefore it came within the strict rule in reference to the Lords dealing with public moneys.

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member asks me, without being able to state exactly what the proviso means, to say that it is a breach of privilege. I cannot say that the proviso is a breach of privilege. I have great difficulty, certainly, in understanding what its effect on the rest of the Bill is, but, as far as I can gather, the section does not propose directly to alter the incidence of taxation. What it does propose to do is to deal with the case of a middleman who has to pay rents and receive rents, and with certain difficulties that arise under the principal Act or may arise under Section 3 as to the distribution of the rate in such a case. It may be that some jot or tittle of alteration of the incidence of taxation may be involved, but there is nothing which I can describe as a breach of privilege after such consideration as I have been able to give to the matter. The hon. Member puts it too high in supposing that the House of Lords cannot in any way whatever touch a question of rating. In dealing with Bills relating to local government, in which rating is involved, this House has never considered that the House of Lords cannot make any amendment. I cannot see that there is any breach of privilege involved in the proviso, and therefore I cannot withdraw it from the House.

Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR (Liverpool, Scotland) suggested that the Attorney General for Ireland should explain the proviso.

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. G. W. Balfour, Leeds, Central) said the proviso dealt with a very small and unimportant point. It did not affect any question of rating, at any rate directly, but simply referred to the temporary adjustment of deductions as between middlemen and head landlords. The law up to the present had been that the middleman might deduct from the head landlord in proportion to the deduction made by the occupying tenant from the middleman. There appeared to have been a certain number of cases in which the occupying tenant was entitled, under contract, to deduct the entire of the poor rate, while the middleman, under his contract with the head landlord, was limited to a deduction of one-half, and it was in order to preserve the advantage given to the head landlord by such special contracts that this Amendment had been inserted. Such cases, however, were extremely few, but as far as the Amendment went it seemed to be correct in principle.

Question put, and agreed to.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said Amendment."

Mr. SWIFT MacNEILL considered that the elimination of Clause 4 amounted to a breach of privilege, and that it should be restored to the Bill. The Lords were constitutionally wrong in taking away the clause, as a matter of public rating was dealt with. He could not push this so far as to say that it was a breach of privilege so clear that Mr. Speaker would deal with it, but he thought it was a case well within the purview of the House to deal with, because it altered the financial arrangement of the Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: As I understand it the matter stands thus: There are certain charges called exclusive charges, which, under the Act of 1898, must be provided for by a special rate. That rate should only raise sufficient money exactly to cover the charge. But sometimes it would be covered by a rate, say, of 2⅛d., but, for convenience sake, those who assess the rate raise a rate of 2¼d. When they have done that, there is a surplus, but there is no power to dispose of that surplus, which has to be carried to a suspense account. What this Section 4 does, as I understand, is this. It is not a rating clause at all. It is a clause merely for the convenience of collection, and, for the convenience of collection, it proposes that those who levy the rate of, say, 2⅛d. may levy a legal rate of 2¼d., and they may legally dispose of the surplus to a particular fund. That is the whole object of the section that has been struck out by the House of Lords. It is not a rating clause. Incidentally I agree with the hon. Member that it may make some trivial difference, but I hardly think that constitutes a breach of the privileges of this House. It is a very slight, insignificant and incidental difference that may arise in carrying out what this House thinks is a convenient method of collection, and I cannot see that this Amendment is out of order, on the ground that it is a breach of privilege.

MR. T. P. O'CONNOR appealed to the Government after the statement of Mr. Speaker to reinsert the clause in the Bill. The Government did not in the first instance make this proposal until having duly considered it. It was not his business to speak for the Government, but it seemed to him that the suggestion of his hon. friend was quite a reasonable one. Under the circumstances he thought the Government ought to restore the clause.

MR. G. W. BALFOUR: I can hardly agree with the views of the hon. Member who has just sat down upon this question. I agree that the original proposal was eminently reasonable and desirable from the point of view of convenience, but considering the late period of the session which we have reached, I am afraid that if we insist upon this clause being re-inserted there may be a very great danger of losing the Bill altogether. The question to be considered is whether, for the sake of this clause, it is worth while undergoing that serious risk. The clause is in no way connected with the other clauses of the Bill, and the omission of it will not affect the material clauses of the Bill. It will cause a certain amount of inconvenience and will necessitate the establishment of a certain number of suspense accounts in the different areas of taxation in Ireland, but I do not think that that inconvenience is so very serious as to require that we should enter into a conflict with the Lords at this period of the session. Sooner or later we shall have to deal with the matter. I think we may submit to this inconvenience, in the hope that it may be removed another year, rather than run the risk of losing the Bill.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL said the Members of the House of Lords were overwhelmingly in favour of the Bill, and surely the right hon. Gentleman ought to put his foot down and have the courage to put in this section, which was supported in another place by two Cabinet Ministers, one of whom had declared that it was an infringement of the privileges of this House. The right hon. Gentleman was wrong in saying that the Lords were against this clause. One Lord, and one Lord only, objected to the clause, and that noble Lord was the last person in the world to take the responsibility of wrecking the Bill. He appealed to the First Lord of the Treasury, who had said he never read the papers——

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I said nothing of the kind.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Well, you read them only when they contain something sensational. If the right hon. Gentleman will read the column in The Times, headed "Imperial Parliament," he will find a report of the proceedings of the Lords yesterday with regard to this Bill, and he will see something, as they say in the agony column, to his advantage.

MR. BIRRELL (Fifeshire W.) asked why should these suspense accounts be opened all over Ireland because of the factious behaviour of some irresponsible person elsewhere. The right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary for Ireland had admitted that this change had frustrated the usefulness of the measure, and why should a reasonable proposal be made impossible simply because it was feared that somebody would be kept a few hours longer? Under these circumstances the House would make itself ridiculous if it did not insist upon restoring the clause.

A consequential Amendment made to the Bill.

MR. T. P. O'CONNOR asked if the Chief Secretary would promise to take the earliest opportunity of remedying the defect caused in the Bill by the Lords Amendment.

MR. G. W. BALFOUR: In all probability we shall introduce a Bill next year to restore the clause which the Lords have thrown out.

TRAMWAYS (IRELAND) ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

Lords Amendment considered.

Lords Amendment, in page 2, line 11 (after "haggard" to insert "or"), agreed to.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said Amendment."

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny) said he knew that it was hopeless after the last division to oppose the Lords Amendment; but, as he feared that this Amendment would interfere with the carrying out of useful tramway projects, he asked the Attorney General for Ireland for some explanation. The Bill was backed by all parties in Ireland. He must say that in the whole history of the House of Lords a more stupid interference had never been attempted by them with any Bill.

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member must speak respectfully of the Members of the other House.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: Very well; but the fact remained that if this Amendment were insisted upon it was another evidence of the proceedings of this House being controlled by the House of Lords, even when that Chamber was not able to muster a quorum. He did not feel disposed to destroy the Bill, but he wished the Attorney General to tell the House the exact meaning of the words struck out of the Bill.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND (Mr. Atkinson, Londonderry, N.) said that the original Bill of 1860 prevented a tramway company from acquiring compulsorily ornamental timber, gardens and orchards attached to houses built with bricks. The Bill as it left the House repealed that section, and the House of Lords had struck out the words in regard to a plantation, so that it would not be possible for a tramway company to acquire compulsorily any plantation attached to any house of any character.

Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR hoped that, after the triumphant exposure of the methods pursued in the House of Lords, the right hon. Gentleman would reject this ridiculous Amendment, and restore the Bill to the original state in which it left the House of Commons. His hon. friend was so anxious that the Bill should pass even in its truncated shape that he was not disposed to push things to extremities; but the right hon. Gentleman should really insist on restoring the Bill to its original and rational shape without amendment. The Government came down and asked the House to accept this Amendment on the plea that they had no power to influence the matter in another place. That was not the general idea with regard to the action of the Government. He did not wish to accuse the Government of any omission of duty, but when Irish Bills of this importance were brought in they ought to take the necessary means to prevent them being mutilated by the fractious conduct of the other House.

Mr. SWIFT MacNEILL deplored the fact that such a healthy measure as the Government had produced, and which they had themselves drafted, should be checked in its action by the vote of a single Lord. He appealed to the First Lord of the Treasury to do something to remove that check.

Mr. G. W. BALFOUR, on behalf of the Government, joined hon. Members opposite in regretting the Amendments made by the House of Lords, but he thought it was better, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, to give way, because if they did not they might lose the whole Bill. The hon. Member for Kilkenny would exercise a very wise discretion in not pressing the matter to a division.

Question put, and agreed to.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.

Considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

Clause 3:—

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES said he desired to call the attention of the House to the end of the last paragraph of this clause. He did not know why it was necessary to insert it. It seemed to him that Clause 2 of the Public Accounts and Charges Act gave all the necessary power. It might possibly be that the paragraph was a survival of the times before the Public Accounts and Charges Act was passed, and if that were so he would commend it to the attention of those who drafted the Bill, who might study the matter during the recess. The point he wished to make was that this paragraph brought for the first time under the purview of the House the appropriations-in-aid. It was quite true that the estimated amount of the appropriations had been before the House, but that was another matter. By a considered ruling the Chairman had ruled that the appropriations-in-aid could not be attacked in Committee. He did not himself intend to move any Amendment, but there was now nothing to prevent any hon. Member moving an Amendment if he chose. His object in rising was to call attention to the very large increase in the appropriations-in-aid. In 1896–97, excluding the ordnance factories, which ought not to be excluded, the appropriations-in-aid effected by this clause amounted to £5,700,000; in 1897–98, £5,900,000; in 1898–99, £6,700,000; and in 1899–1900, £6,965,600, an increase of a million and a quarter in four years for appropriations-in-aid, which were entirely withdrawn from the purview of the House. The large increase in these appropriations-in-aid was a matter seriously deserving the attention of the right hon. Gentleman the Financial Secretary to the Treasury and the House. He hoped next year instead of an increase the amount would be largely diminished.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. HANBURY, Preston) said the right hon. Gentleman was perfectly well aware that it had been the consistent policy of the Public Accounts Committee for the last ten or twelve years to recommend that wherever it was possible to alter the payments from Exchequer receipts into appropriations-in-aid that should be done. The hon. Gentleman had plenty of opportunity to convince the Public Accounts Committee upon that technical subject. No doubt these appropriations-in-aid had largely increased during the last few years, but that had been due to the recommendation of the Committee having been followed. The result was that wherever the receipts were small and variable in amount they were made direct. It was not so much a matter for the Treasury as for the Committee of Public Accounts.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES said he only wished to emphasise the fact that these appropriations-in-aid were withdrawn from the control of the Committee and were largely increasing, and he respectfully submitted that this was a matter the Committee ought to consider.

Clause 3 and the remaining clauses were agreed to.

Bill reported, without amendment; to be read the third time To-morrow.

POST OFFICE MAIL CONTRACT—SOUTH AND CENTRAL AMERICA.

MR. HANBURY said he thought he ought to give some explanation with regard to this matter. The only variations from the existing contract were on three points. The House was aware that the services between this country and the east and west coasts of South America were carried on by alternate services—by the Royal Mail Steamship Company from Southampton and the Steam Navigation Company from Liverpool. The only alteration so far as the places to be visited were concerned was that these steamers would call once a month at the Falkland Islands, and there would be a return service from the Falkland Islands to Liverpool; and on the west coast of America there would be a new service from Panama to places in Mexico. An important alteration had been introduced into the system of payment. We had hitherto paid by weight, but in future under this ten years contract we should pay a lump sum. He thought that was decidedly advantageous, because there was no doubt whatever that the traffic along these coasts would grow considerably during the next ten years, and whatever the growth might be we should only pay in the future £30,000 a year, £2,500 of the £32,500 being paid by the Falkland Islands. The payment by weight came to £25,000, so that even upon the present service these important services would only amount to £5,000 more.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the contract dated the 1st day of June, 1900, entered into with the Pacific Steam Navigation Company for the conveyance of mails between Liverpool and South and Central America and the Falkland Islands be approved."—(Mr. Hanbury.)

MR. CALDWELL did not propose to go into the merits. He rose to protest against this contract being brought forward upon the last day of the session. He pointed out that the contract was entered into on June 1st, and under those circumstances he thought it ought to have been brought forward earlier.

MR. HANBURY explained that that date was put on in order that there might be no hiatus between the old contract and this. This contract was only signed on the 1st of August.

MR. CALDWELL said it was impossible to consider a contract of this nature at this time. He hoped in future these contracts would be brought in at a much earlier stage of the session. He could not allow this to pass without a protest.

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

Her Majesty's Most Gracious Speech was delivered to both Houses of Parliament by the Lord High Chancellor (in pursuance of Her Majesty's Commands), as followeth:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"My relations with the Powers of Europe and America continue to be friendly.

"I have given my assent with sincere pleasure to the Act establishing the Commonwealth of Australia, which will weld together in close and indissoluble union the federating Colonies, and will add to the strength and resources of this portion of my Empire.

"The war in South Africa, into which this country has been forced by the aggressive action of the two Dutch Republics, has not yet reached its conclusion; but my armies have driven back the invaders beyond the frontier they had crossed, and have occupied the two capitals of the enemy and much of his territory. The operations which have been conducted for this purpose have in many parts been marked by brilliant skill and success, and have placed in the strongest light the heroism and the high military qualities of the troops who have been brought together under my banner from this country, from Canada, from Australasia, and from my South African possessions.

"Believing that the continued political independence of the two Republics would be a constant danger to the peace of South Africa, I have authorised the annexation of the Orange Free State to my Empire. I trust that this will be the first step towards the union of races under institutions which, while establishing from the outset good and just government for all, may be in time developed so as to secure equal rights and privileges in my South African dominions.

"The British and other Legations at Peking have been unexpectedly attacked by an insurgent mob, and it is feared that many of their inmates have been murdered. How far Chinese authorities were accomplices in this atrocious crime, and whether the British Minister and his family have been among the victims, are matters that are still in some uncertainty. The utmost efforts will be made by myself and my allies to visit with worthy punishment the authors of this unexampled crime. I have sent a considerable force of British and Indian troops to assist in protecting the interests of Europeans in that country, and have largely reinforced my squadron in those waters.

"I regret that a rising of the Ashanti and other tribes in the neighbourhood of Coomassie has made it necessary to despatch an expedition for the relief of that place, where the Governor of the colony was besieged by overwhelming numbers. I have learned with satisfaction that my troops, which consist entirely of local levies under British officers, have effected the object of the expedition, in spite of the stubborn resistance of the insurgent tribes and the great difficulties of climate and season with which they have had to contend.

"In my Indian dominions the failure of the rains last autumn has caused intense and prolonged distress over a large part of the country. Strenuous and persistent endeavour has been made by my Governments to relieve suffering and prevent starvation. The self-denying efforts of my officers, and of the many private persons who have joined in the relief operations, deserve the highest commendation.

"Though the fall of rain this season has been abnormally late, it is hoped that its volume may be sufficient to rapidly curtail the present area of distress, and restore to the people their previous means of livelihood.

"The epidemic of plague continues, but the extent and virulence of the disease have decreased, and there has been a marked diminution in the mortality.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"I thank you for the liberality with which you have responded to the unwonted demands I have been compelled to make on you. The satisfactory progress of the campaign in South Africa gives fair ground for hoping that the excessive requirements of military expenditure will be soon abated.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"Though the time has not been favourable to legislation upon internal questions, I congratulate you on having added to the Statute-book several enactments which will be advantageous to industry and commerce. The passage of a measure for increasing the security of tenant-farmers in the value of their own improvements, and for extending the law of compensation for accidents to the farm labourer, will have a beneficial influence upon agriculture. A valuable Bill has been passed with the object of preventing the accidents to which railway servants have been exposed in the performance of their duty.

"The Bill for the regulation of Limited Companies, and for the discovery of fraud in the conduct of them, will supply a want that has long been keenly felt. The Bill that has been passed for regulating the business of money-lenders will also tend to check transactions of an oppressive and injurious character.

"The measure you have passed for facilitating the erection of dwellings for the working classes will afford some assistance in the solution of a problem of which the difficulty appears to increase with every succeeding year.

"The Ecclesiastical Assessments (Scotland) and the Tithe Rent-charge (Ireland) Acts will remove long-standing causes of friction and injustice. Measures have also been passed for augmenting our Naval reserves, and for rendering our Volunteer forces more available for purposes of home defence.

"I pray that Almighty God may have you in His keeping, and that His blessing may be with you."

Then a Commission for proroguing the Parliament was read.

After which the LORD CHANCELLOR said:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"By virtue of Her Majesty's Commission, under the Great Seal, to us and other Lords directed, and now read, we do, in Her Majesty's Name, and in obedience to Her Commands, prorogue this Parliament to Saturday the twenty-seventh day of October next, to be then here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Saturday the twenty-seventh day of October next."

QUESTIONS.

CHINA—ANTI-FOREIGN OUTBREAK—ADVANCE ON PEKING.

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall): I beg to ask the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether he has any information with regard to the advance on Peking.

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): No, Sir. We have no information.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—DISCOVERY OF DOCUMENTS AT BLOEMFONTEIN AND PRETORIA SAID TO IMPLICATE M.P.'S.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): I rise to call attention to a matter which affects the privileges and practice of this House. I wish, Sir, to ask you whether the Speaker, as the guardian of the rights and privileges of the House, is not entitled to request the right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary to produce certain letters which he says he has in his possession, and which affect Members of this House—letters which the right hon. Gentleman quoted from on Friday last.

*MR. SPEAKER: There is no question of privilege involved, and the hon. Member cannot address the House except upon a question of privilege. I have no right to ask a Minister such a question as he suggests.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: You will bear with me. This is a very serious matter.

*MR. SPEAKER: I cannot allow the hon. Member to occupy the time of the House on the suggestion that something is a matter of privilege which does not involve any question of privilege.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: It involves—[Ministerial cries of "Order, order!"] I shall not be shouted down. It involves the honour of Members of this House. The Colonial Secretary has made a statement which affects the honour of Members of this House.

*MR. SPEAKER: That is not a question of privilege.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: But is there not a ruling by Sir Erskine May, that no Member of the House shall read or quote from a document unless he is prepared to lay it upon the Table?

*MR. SPEAKER: I am quite aware of the ruling the hon. Member refers to. If any member of the Government were to quote from some document, there may be a right to have the whole of it read. That is a question of order, not of privilege, and the point of order should be raised at the moment the question arises. There is no question of privilege at all.

HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL ARRANGEMENTS INQUIRY.

The following question appeared on the Paper:—

SIR WALTER FOSTER (Derbyshire, Ilkeston): To ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he can arrange for the early publication of the evidence given before Lord Justice Romer's Commission prior to the departure of the Commissioners for South Africa.

The HON. MEMBER said: I do not propose to put this question, as I have received from the right hon. Gentleman an explanation why he cannot accede to my request.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee): Has any estimate been formed of the date on which the Report of the Commission may be expected?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): No, Sir; I have no authoritative statement, but I do not anticipate that the South African Inquiry will take a great deal of time.

IRELAND—TRAMORE PIER.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he is yet in a position to say if the Lords of the Treasury will make the necessary grant for the erection of a pier at Tramore for the landing of fish; and, if so, what amount the Treasury will grant, and when the work will commence.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. HANBURY, Preston): This question only appeared on the Paper this morning. I really cannot give the hon. Member the information he desires.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I put the question down in consequence of what the right hon. Gentleman said yesterday.

MARLBOROUGH STREET TRAINING COLLEGE, DUBLIN—TEACHERS' PERSONAL ALLOWANCES.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Commissioners of National Education (Ireland) received a memorandum from the teachers at present at the course of hand and eye training in Marlborough Street, requesting an increase in the personal allowance of 3s. per day given them while in Dublin attending the lectures; and, if so, what action have the Board taken on the matter; have the Board acknowledged the receipt of that memorandum, or communicated their decision on it to those teachers; and can he state whether the teachers who attended a course of lectures in 1883 to prepare them for the office of organiser received 7s. 6d. as personal allowance per diem, and have the Commissioners refused to grant even 3s. per day to the majority of Dublin teachers attending the course; and, seeing that those teachers have sacrificed their annual holidays, and in many cases have provided substitutes in their schools at their own expense, to forward the new scheme of the Board without any prospect of personal gain, whether he will recommend that proper allowance is made in all cases.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. G. W. BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): The Memorandum referred to has been received and considered by the Commissioners. The claim of the teachers to an increased personal allowance is not regarded as just or reasonable, and they will be so informed. The teachers residing in Dublin are, of course, not entitled to any such allowance. As the teachers are bound to qualify themselves for giving instruction in the new manual work, their reference to the sacrificing their convenience in the matter of vacation, or in providing substitutes for this purpose, seems to be uncalled for.

SPRINGTOWN EVENING SCHOOL—TEACHERS' EMOLUMENTS.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Springtown Evening School, county Longford, Roll No. 8470, has been recognised by the Commissioners of National Education for the six months ending 30th April, 1900, and that the emoluments of the teacher, as set forth by National Board's circular, were to consist of salary, results fees, and customs and excise grant; and whether, seeing that, although the inspector examined and reported favourably on the above-named evening school, the teacher has only received salary as yet at the rate of £1 per month, any further sum will be paid him in lieu of abolished results fees and the customs grants; and, if so, when will the payments be made.

MR. G. W. BALFOUR: The teacher's emoluments for the six months referred to will consist of salary and the equivalent for results fees and customs grant. The latter item will be remitted at an early date.

GRAND CANAL COMPANY.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he has seen a letter of Mr. Kirkland, manager of the Grand Canal Company, in which he states that, although his company pays over £2,000 a year in tolls to the Government through the Irish Board of Works, they refuse to reduce the tolls or afford facilities for carrying on their trade with Limerick; that in the year 1898 the towing-path on the Government Canal between Killaloe and Limerick was so flooded that the Grand Canal Company's traffic was stopped, and that their boat cargoes had to be sent by rail from Killaloe to Limerick; also that the crane at Banagher recently broke down, killing a man; and also that the Grand Canal Company have been charged tolls on as much as five tons per boat more cargo than they got freight for themselves; and whether he will inquire into the truth of these complaints, and see that such a reduction of tolls is made and such facilities for trading be afforded where the Government have control (notably under the Board of Works) as will enable the Grand Canal Company's trading competition to be maintained in the public interest.

MR. G. W. BALFOUR: I answered this question yesterday. I promised to look into the matter and report to the hon. Member.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.

Order for Third Reading read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read the third time."

MR. URE (Linlithgowshire): I propose on this stage of the Appropriation Bill to raise once more the question of the unsettled claim in connection with the loss of the steamship "Kowshing." This matter has really passed from the region of the personal and local into that of the National and Imperial, and I submit that it is of sufficient gravity to warrant asking the deliberate judgment of the House of Commons. The first duty of a civilised Government is to protect the rights of its citizens abroad—to protect them from oppression, and if it is unwilling to come to their rescue, then it absolutely fails in its duty. On two previous occasions have I had to narrate the facts of this case to this House, and the right hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs has freely admitted that my statement of them is substantially accurate. I will therefore on this occasion confine myself to the briefest possible recapitulation of the broad facts of the case. Six years ago this British ship was sunk by the Japanese in Chinese waters. But although the guns were fired from a Japanese cruiser, the Chinese Government was alone responsible for the disaster. Of that there can be no possible question. After careful inquiry into the facts of the case, the Government of the day announced their intention of prosecuting the claim of these British subjects against the Chinese Government, and within a short period of the present Administration coming into office they were placed in possession of the necessary details. But from that day to this absolutely no progress has been made, and we seem to be just as near a settlement to-day as we were on the day the disaster occurred. What is the excuse offered for this unconscionable delay? The first was the temporary sickness of the Chinese Ambassador. That served both the Government and China for two whole years! At the end of the two years our Government woke up and again stated the claim. This time we were met by the excuse that it was necessary to translate the documents connected with the case, and that this was a job which would occupy a considerable time. But let the House remember that the Chinese Ambassador at that date was the very official who made the contract with the owners of the "Kowshing." Let it further be borne in mind that the Chinese Government had already had two and a half years to make itself acquainted with the documents, and the House will then be able to judge of the sufficiency of the excuse. Still it was deemed sufficient, and the Government again slumbered and slept. And they have not yet completely awakened from that sleep. I confess there never was a Government so easily deceived and befooled by flimsy excuses. It would almost seem as if this were their first experience of Oriental diplomacy, so guilelessly did they accept the pleas put forward for not paying a just claim. However, the fact remains that for a period of five years excuses as to the sickness of an ambassador, and the necessity for translating a charter-party and other documents satisfied our Government. What could be said of a Government with such an enormous majority, which sought to shake itself free from the responsibility of vindicating the rights of British subjects? Had it been a French, German, Russian, or American subject who had suffered the loss, does any hon. Member for one moment believe that six years would have been allowed to elapse, or that the sufferer's Government would have been put off with such flimsy excuses as those which obviously sufficed for Her Majesty's Government? I venture to say that six months would not have been allowed to elapse without this just claim being enforced. The right hon. Gentleman says, "What am I to do; do you wish me formally to declare war against China for the purpose of enforcing this claim?" Has it really come to this, that the right hon. Gentleman, with all the resources of the British Foreign Office at his back, finds himself to be dead beat when confronted with the task of recovering a few thousand pounds from a recalcitrant foreigner? A Liberal Government sent the British Fleet to the Piræus in order to enforce an admittedly exaggerated claim of a foreigner—a man who was a Jew by religion and a Portuguese by extraction, whose claim against the Greek Government was debated for four nights in the House of Commons—and they refused to withdraw the Fleet until the claim was settled; yet the present Government seems to suggest, through the mouth of the Under Secretary opposite, that in this case the resources of diplomacy are completely exhausted, and that it has no means of recovering this just debt. In view of what appears in the last Blue-book on China, I do not think the right hon. Gentleman will need to pick a quarrel with the Government of China in order to recover compensation for the loss of the "Kowshing." The quarrel has already been picked for him on totally different grounds. Why cannot this claim be pressed to a final settlement? I notice the right hon. Gentleman said, in answer to a question the other day, that the present hitch arose in the adjustment of the terms of reference. I was astonished and disappointed to read that, because, to my mind, it points to this—that China now disputes our claim on its merits; that she now denies liability altogether, and does not merely question the amount. When on previous occasions I have stated the facts in this House I have laid emphasis on the point that the Chinese Government has never disputed its liability, although it had questioned the amount it ought to pay. But now, if I apprehend the right hon. Gentleman's answer aright, China has shifted her ground after a lapse of five years, and maintains that the question of liability is still open. When the right hon. Gentleman replies to me I hope he will state when it was that China for the first time disputed her liability, and what specifically are the grounds on which it disputes what I have regarded as an undeniable claim. Four or more years have elapsed since the Law Officers of the Crown advised this Government that the claim was unanswerable in law, and as I am informed, the highest authority on international law in this country, after closely and narrowly investigating the whole facts, has unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that the Chinese Government is alone to blame. It would be a rather sad thing if at this time of the day the Government were to go into an arbitration, leaving the question of liability open. I hope the right hon. Gentleman will not take that course, but that the Government will stand firm, and in the event of an arbitrator being appointed will insist on going before him on only one question—namely, that of amount. Even if that course be adopted there must inevitably be a long delay before this matter can be finally settled. Now, the victims of these long delays do not understand the ways of diplomacy. The widow of the chief engineer of the "Kowshing," who is resident in my constituency, is now almost in despair. She lost her breadwinner, and I am sure the House will admit that her case is a very hard one. I have no reason to suppose that others are not in a like position. These humble people, who have lost their breadwinners, have for upwards of six years been waiting and trusting to the Government to enforce their most just claims. May I offer a suggestion on their behalf to the right hon. Gentleman? The House heard with unfeigned satisfaction, in connection with the "Waima" claims, that the Government were prepared—pending the final settlement—to afford some temporary relief to the sufferers. Will not the Government in this case inquire into the facts and ascertain those sufferers who are really in need of help, and follow the same course as in the Waima case, by affording some temporary alleviation of the long sufferings of these unfortunate people who lost their means of support by this disaster? It is possible—I hope it is not probable—that the right hon. Gentleman will tell us to-day that the hands of the Government are already more than full of British interests requiring protection in the Far East, and that the intensity of the situation at Peking at the present moment eclipses all other interests, and so fully absorbs the energies of the Government that they have practically no time left for the prosecution of this claim. In ordinary circumstances, I think, the House would have been readily prepared to accept that as a sufficient answer, and I, at any rate, would have had such an appreciation of the fitness of things as not to have ventured to raise this question to-day. But the circumstances are different. I am speaking of a wrong committed not yesterday, or six months, or a year ago, but many years since. Now, the extreme gravity of the situation at Peking has only become apparent to us during the present summer, and the period of our breathless anxiety is measured by only ten weeks. Therefore I say the right hon. Gentleman cannot plead that as an excuse or even an explanation of this prolonged delay, of this supineness, this almost culpable negligence of the Government to enforce admittedly just claims, and to perform what I call the rudimentary duty of a civilised Government, to protect the interests of its subjects abroad. I beg to move that the Bill be read a third time this day three months.

Amendment proposed—

"To leave out the word 'now,' and at the end of the question to add the words 'upon this day three months.'"—(Mr. Ure.)

*SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall): I regret having to trouble the House for a short time on this occasion, but the necessity for my doing so is the very unusual action of the Government the other day in putting five or six Bills before the Second Reading of the Appropriation Bill. I do not think that that ought to pass without a word of protest, because, in my long recollection of this House, I have never known the Appropriation Bill to be put further down than the second Order, and then only with a very unimportant Bill before it. It is worthy of protest also, because the opportunities of private Members have been so greatly curtailed of recent years that the operations of this House now mainly consist of exchanges of views between the two Government Benches. With regard to the affairs in China, the gravity of the position is obvious to all. I wish it were as clear that Her Majesty's Government realised what the situation demands of them. We have every reason from the past to be suspicious and even distrustful of the policy of Her Majesty's Ministers towards China. During the past six years the most lamentable sins of omission and commission have marked the conduct of Chinese affairs by both parties. The mutual compliments between the two Front Benches, which are now a regular feature of a Chinese debate, are far from reassuring. They are taken, I know, for statesmanship by many; but to me they are more like the winks which the Augurs of old exchanged when the populace were being victimised in some peculiarly flagrant way. The debate of last Thursday did good, in spite of the melancholy vaticinations of those gentlemen who, having no feasible policy of their own, hope to get credit for wisdom and moderation by denouncing those who have a policy and have the courage to avow it. The declaration which was elicited from the Under Secretary of State on Thursday was generally welcomed by this House and by public opinion. It was to a certain extent satisfactory, though deficient, as I shall proceed to show, in several vital points. It was satisfactory because it proved that Her Majesty's Government have at last decided frankly and fully to carry into effect the resolution of 1st March, 1898, which this House passed nemine contradicente, in favour of the independence and territorial integrity of the Chinese Empire. The Government, by their mouthpiece, declared on Thursday in most unequivocal terms against the partition of China, and against any of those thinly-veiled attempts at partition which have passed under the name of spheres of influence, or spheres of interest, and which have misled some of my hon. friends. The debate on Thursday was also satisfactory, because it exposed that dangerous farce the Yang-tsze Valley Protectorate, which some have tried to substitute as an alternative policy to the independence of China, and as a feasible policy for this country to adopt. It is an impracticable policy, not merely because it means the partition of China, and would set all China against us, and also the United States, and probably the German Empire as well, but because it would involve the creation of a second India in Central China, with an enormous political and administrative organisation, and an immense army. Nor is this all. The Imperial genius and resource of the English race and the wealth and vigour of our Empire may be equal to the creation of a second India, but the Yang-tsze-Kiang valley has no strategical frontier. It could be easily attacked and overrun by the forces which Russia, after a few years of conquest, would accumulate by conscription in the northern provinces of China. I think that the debate of Thursday also gave the coup de grâce to that cuckoo cry of "the Concert of Europe" and that most delusive reliance upon a "Concert" that does not exist, that cannot exist, and that is a veritable misleader and chimera. This fictitious Concert only deceives ourselves, helps our enemies, paralyses our action, leaves British policy at the mercy of our foes, and presents them with a powerful lever for confounding British interests and promoting their own aims. I was vehemently attacked on Thursday for venturing to expose the hollowness and danger of this Concert, that does not exist, and the tremendous peril to British interests of basing our policy upon such a will-o'-the-wisp. Surely it is far better both for our policy, for our own success, for the credit of the Government, and for the peace of the world that our people should understand at once that the only hope of a successful issue in China is a clearly defined British policy, supported by the allies of England and by the friends of peace. Such a policy must be based on distinct objects and with a clear aim; and not upon a mere hopeless attempt to make our policy harmonise with foreign ambitions and schemes, which are at absolute variance with it. Such an attempt can only end in deplorable and fatal inaction on our part, or in placing our enemies in coigns of vantage from which they cannot be dislodged, or only with immense sacrifices. There is the greatest danger nowadays of our people falling victims to catch-penny and delusive phrases. This is the age of cheap fallacies, and the "Concert of Europe" is one of the most misleading. Another was used by the Member for Whitby in the course of his otherwise excellent speech on Thursday, and also by the Under Secretary of State. He said, amid cheers, that he would rather go half way with all the Powers than all the way alone. How absurd when tested by fact does this fetching phrase become. Would he rather go half way to Peking with all the Powers than all the way alone?

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): I said I would rather go half way with all the

*SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: The right hon. Gentleman has not bettered his case by this explanation. Would he really rather go half way to Peking than all the way? Is it ever worth while to go half way anywhere? The statement is an absurd paradox. The action of Her Majesty's Government has been a series of very feeble attempts from the very first. So much for the satisfactory side of the Ministerial declaration. But there are features not reassuring. First, there is the military position. Although two months have passed since the crisis began, there seems still to be no general in command of the allied forces. The conditions of modern warfare render it most important that there should be a skilful commander-in-chief. The area of modern warfare is so large, the necessity of effective turning movements is so great, that a supreme head is most needful. The losses at Tientsin were far greater than necessary owing to the confusion of command. I hold that such a commander-in-chief should be an English general officer, because our position in China is greater and our interests far larger than any other Power's, and also because our soldiers at Tientsin are more numerous than those of any other European Power. There are special reasons also why British troops should not be placed under the command of other nationalities, whose ideas of warfare are very different to our own, and in a country where already most cruel and deplorable sacrifice of civilian life has been inflicted. I cannot believe that it would have been impossible to get the consent of the great majority of the Powers to an English commander-in-chief, had this been pressed soon enough and vigorously enough. I fear it will turn out that, just as the despatch of July 6th which led the Japanese to send an effective force ought to have been sent on the 8th June, so the question of commander-in-chief has been put off till too late for practical settlement in our favour. I trust that this will not have a disastrous effect upon the relief of the Legations. It may certainly have a very awkward effect when the allied forces are at Peking; and may lead to horrible scenes of slaughter and rapine. The tales of what took place at Tientsin are bad enough; but Peking, with its million of inhabitants exposed to the licence of five or six different armies, might easily offer scenes of horror that would be a disgrace to our so-called civilisation, and would consolidate Chinese resistance to Western progress and Christianity as nothing else could do. I am not a pseudo-humanitarian. I know what war means and what war must involve. But I am confident that while we must defeat and thoroughly smash Chinese armed resistance, and must punish in a striking way the leaders of this barbarous revolution and attack upon the European representatives in China, it will have a most beneficent effect upon the Chinese people and on behalf of Christian influence and repute if the peaceful and innocent non-combatant population of China are spared as much as possible. It will be easier to get to Peking than to get away from Peking. At this moment there seems to be a general attack made by Russian troops upon the northern boundary of China. In fact, a state of war has been created upon a large part of the Russo-Chinese frontier. One of the many difficulties before the allied troops at Peking will be to avoid being used as an irresistible lever for placing the whole of Northern China at the mercy of this separate Russian invasion from the north. There will be no satisfactory settlement of the present crisis, which strengthens the military position of Russia in Northern China. That must be a cardinal point in British policy. It would be better to at once occupy the whole Yang-tsze Kiang valley, with all its immense responsibilities, than to allow this crisis to end by Russia getting hold of Manchuria. Every square mile of Chinese territory brought under Russian control is so much territory taken away from British commerce and from the free commerce of the world. The aim of Russia is to keep China in disorder and decay, so as to facilitate its conquest when the right moment comes. The Boxer movement was encouraged so as to break up the splendid organisation, mainly British, which Sir Robert Hart's ability and industry have built up for the Chinese Customs during the past thirty years. Efforts have been made by Russia to get hold of all the northern railways, and now even of that between Ta-ku, Tientsin, and Peking. These malign encroachments can only be met and baffled by a clear and resolute British policy, supported as it would be, if distinctly and courageously put forward, by the irresistible influence of the United States, of Japan, and, I believe, also of Germany. The theory that Northern China is lost and must become Russian is a pusillanimous and disastrous theory. Northern China is not lost. It need not be lost if only this country will firmly maintain, with the support of its allies, the policy of Chinese integrity to which it is now pledged, and will also take effective measures to see that an honest and progressive Government is upheld in China. And here I come to the most serious defect in the Ministerial programme as I understood it. What China most needs is reform; what the Chinese most crave for is an honest administration. This very Boxer movement originated in the plaint of the dumb masses of China against the cruelties and exactions to which they are subjected by a corrupt and capricious ruling clique. Unless this crisis results in the reform of the Chinese Government, all the bloodshed, all the sacrifice of treasure and life will have been in vain. The result of the heroism of your Ministers, of the courage of your troops, of your vast expenditure, will be nil, or even worse than nothing, for they will but rivet more firmly the chains of servitude upon the four hundred millions of Chinese now groaning under misgovernment. In my opinion nothing could be more unfortunate than the statement of the hon. Baronet the Member for the Berwick Division of Northumberland. After saying that—

> "It is to our interest that the Government of China should be independent, strong, and better than it has been in the past," he went on to deal a fatal blow to those pious aspirations. The hon. Baronet added—

> "It is not our business, nor the business of other Powers, to attempt to set up that Government. It must be formed by the Chinese themselves."

Such a pitiful laisser aller policy as this must destroy all hope for the future of China. The hon. Baronet has got great credit by always sitting on the wall and coming down on one side when the course of the political current is clear. In this case opportunism is deadly. Of course, the Government must be Chinese; but what chance is there of a sound and honest Government being set up unless England and the Powers that sympathise with England give the Chinese a start, and a sure start, on the right path? It is not for me to attempt to lay down the exact manner in which influence should be used by Her Majesty's Government and other Powers. There are good men in China; there are honest and capable Chinese, and true patriots in China. But except by Western knowledge and support, how can this small leaven of upright and progressive Chinese ever get into power and remain in power? Abandon the internal affairs of China, as the hon. Baronet advises, and you will leave those 400 millions again to fall under the sway of the Tuans and the Chengs and the Li Ping Hengs, or the coterie of Palace eunuchs, who are said to have more influence than any Prince. If any good is to come out of this welter of revolution, massacre, and furious war, you must make it your business to see that a good Chinese Government is set up at Peking, and you must support it. You will have to send a strong Ambassador to China, one of the strongest men that your great Oriental service can provide, a man of experience and force of character. You will have to support him by a strong and determined and unwavering backing at Downing Street. The hon. Baronet would commit in China the same wretched and ruinous blunder which his party made after the Crimean War in Turkey. That sanguinary and costly struggle was undertaken by the Liberal party for great objects—the liberties of Europe. It was successful, and would have been a boon to the world, had the same party that caused and waged it not abnegated their duty towards Turkey, and thereby sacrificed all the results of the Crimean War. No effort was made by England after the Crimean War to keep Turkey in the path of progress, economy, and good government. The result we have seen in our own time, in widespread and almost unparalleled destruction of life and human agony. That may also happen in regard to China. You may relieve the Legations, put down revolution, and restore apparent order; but unless you follow this up by resolute pressure in order to maintain an honest Chinese Government in Peking all your efforts and sacrifices will be thrown away. I do not know whether the present Under Secretary of State meant to endorse the views of his predecessor or not. In one portion of his speech he made a very equivocal statement, which sounded like an echo from across the Table. But towards the end of his speech the right hon Gentleman made a reassuring utterance which I should rather wish to believe to be the real policy of Her Majesty's Government. He expressed a hope that the Powers of Europe will discover a foundation on which a tolerable Chinese Government may be built up. He pointed out how vital it was to this country, both from our splendid and increasing trade, from Sir Robert Hart's great Customs organisation, and from other British efforts, that a reformed Chinese administration should be the outcome of the present crisis. This, Sir, is the real problem; upon its solution the issue for good or for evil not only for China, but for British interests and for those of all truly civilised and peace-loving nations, depends. But this problem can only be solved by Her Majesty's Government taking a brave, clear, and sustained lead in the reform of China. It can only be successfully solved by Her Majesty's Government deliberately uniting around the lead of England the support of those Powers that are really wishful for the progress, the integrity, and the peaceful development of the Chinese people.

*MR. BRODRICK: Although we have had the advantage twice within seven days of hearing from my hon. friend a fairly full expression of his views with reference to the policy of Her Majesty's Government in China, I think the House would be almost disappointed if my hon. friend had not followed his invariable practice on the last day of the session of not allowing the Government to go away without having received a warning from him as to the dangers which the country might undergo during the time they would be exempt from his criticism. I fully recognise the right of my hon. friend, even within the interval of a few days, to develop afresh his opinions on the policy of the Government with regard to China which was announced a few days ago, but I must not be regarded as a consenting party on behalf of the Government to all the views which my hon. friend has expressed in the course of his speech. I know the interest he takes in the whole question, but when he claims to-day that the Government have come round to his views I will not grudge him his triumph—I believe he considers the whole session has been a triumph for him. I will not refer to the unsound principles we have deserted or to the sound principles he has instilled into us; I will not even go so far as to point out that almost in one and same sentence he upbraided us for not having arrived at a conclusion with foreign Powers, and informed us that the weakness of our position was that we were acting in concert with foreign Powers; but there is just this one thing I must say with regard to our policy, and that is that I wish it to be clearly understood that as my hon. friend claims us as converts to his way of thinking we are not to be bound by the interpretation which he has put on my speech. I believe the House and the country fully understand what the policy of Her Majesty's Government with regard to China is at the present moment, and I do not think it necessary to recapitulate what I have already said. I fully agree with my hon. friend that it will be most necessary to choose representatives in China who will represent Her Majesty's Government with firmness. At the present moment our opinion with regard to China is this—that the fewer words we use the easier it will be to make good the position we desire to take up. We are quite conscious that in matters of this kind we can neither be too closely bound nor should we be wise to lay down principles which at some future time it might be inconvenient to carry out. I can only say that we will follow with absolute firmness, perseverance, and determination with regard to British interests, both in the north of China and the Yang-tsze valley, so far as they are affected, the course which the House would desire to see us take. There was an advantage in the length of my hon. friend's speech, because during it I received two telegrams from China which the House will desire to hear. One is a telegram in cipher from Sir Claude MacDonald, handed in at Tsinan Yamen, 3.40 p.m. yesterday, and received at 7 o'clock this morning—

> "Peking, 3rd August.—I have to-day received your cipher telegram forwarded through Chinese Minister. Shell and cannon fire ceased 16th July, but rifle fire has continued from Chinese position, held by Chinese troops and 'Boxers,' intermittently ever since. Our casualties since then slight. The following British killed:—Warren, David Oliphant, aptain Strouts, Privates Scalding and hillips, Royal Marines. Wounded—Twenty-x British, including Captains Wray and alliday, students Peachey and Townshend, nd The Times correspondent, Dr. Morrison. Vith exception of Private Sawyer, all wounded oing well. The rest of British in Legation oing well, including garrison. Total loss -killed, 60; wounded, 110. We have trengthened our fortifications, and have over 00 women and children refugees in Legation. hinese Government have refused us permis-ion to telegraph in cipher until now."

That telegram establishes the fact of the afety of Sir C. MacDonald. A further elegram, I am glad to say, gives some nformation as to the advance of the llies. It was received at the Admiralty rom the Admiral at Chifu, handed in at hifu, 6th August, 9.10, and received t the Admiralty at 7 o'clock a.m., 8th August—

"Allies, about 12,000, attacked Chinese ntrenched position at Hsiku, about two miles outside Teintsin, early this morning. Chinese driven out and retreated northwards pursued by allies, who occupied Peitsing. Transport followed troops by road and river. Advance on Peking begun."

These telegrams, I think, are, on the whole, satisfactory. Before I sit down I will say a few words in reference to the question raised by the hon. Member for Linlithgow. I was a little astonished that at practically the last moment of the session the hon. Member should choose his opportunity for bringing this "Kow-shing" case forward, seeing that he had not referred to it at any period during the whole session. The hon. Gentleman spoke of this case as a grave national scandal, and also said that the position shows the intense weakness of the Government. And he used a variety of other disparaging observations. The strong expressions used by the hon. Member are not justified by the facts. I stated perfectly clearly last year, and now repeat the statement, that the cause of delay was not want of firmness on the part of Her Majesty's Government. The fact is that the Chinese Government dispute the claim put forward, representing that, the ship being chartered by the Chinese Government and sunk by the Japanese before the actual declaration of war, the claim should be made against the Japanese and not the Chinese Government. Our Law Officers take a different view, holding that our claim is good against the Chinese Government. There is a difference of opinion which cannot be disposed of in the way the hon. Member suggests. It is not for Great Britain to dictate to China and to send up a fleet, as the hon. Member proposed, in a dispute involving a few thousand pounds. To do so would be to wantonly provoke an outbreak such as we now have to deplore. It would be absolutely impossible to carry on diplomatic intercourse with foreign Powers in such a manner that, when divergence of opinion arises which cannot be immediately reconciled, recourse should at once be had to hostile measures. I can only say, as I have said before, that no single case has been pending against the Chinese Government as to which we have not obtained a settlement sooner or later, and such a result will, I hope, be attained in this case, though naturally we may all object to Oriental procrastination. In this particular case, as hon. Members are aware, arbitration has already been agreed upon, and Mr. Choate, the United States Ambassador, a jurist of great repute and a man of absolute impartiality, has been suggested by the Chinese Government and has undertaken to act as arbitrator. There is still a difficulty as to the exact terms of reference, and this difficulty it is impossible for the Government to resolve under present conditions, the Chinese Minister having referred the question to Peking. The hon. Member has asked whether an advance of money could not be made to the claimant for damages as in the Waima case, but that does not appear to me a reasonable proposal. In the Waima case, certain officers and soldiers died in the discharge of their duty, being fired upon unexpectedly—quite a different case to that where people put their money into a commercial venture, carrying troops for a foreign Government when war was on the point of breaking out. I anticipate that in this, as in all other cases, the Government will, sooner or later, see full justice done,

MR. URE: Will the right hon. Gentleman be good enough to state whether the Chinese Government have disputed their liability, and what are the specific grounds on which they deny their responsibility?

*MR. BRODRICK: They have disputed liability all along.

MR. URE: What are the specific grounds on which the Chinese dispute that their troops took forcible command of a British ship at a supreme moment?

*Mr. BRODRICK: I cannot go into details. It is extremely undesirable to discuss in this House the details of a question to be submitted to arbitration.

Sir WILFRID LAWSON (Cumberland, Cockermouth): The hon. Member for the Ecclesall Division said that the proceedings of this House had now degenerated into an interchange of views between the two Front Benches. As my two hon. friends below me do not seem to be about to take advantage of their opportunities, I wish to call attention to another matter. A new rule has been laid down that the South African letters are not a matter which should be brought forward in this House on a point of privilege, or a point of order. I wish to bring it forward to-day entirely as a point of honour. Now, what has happened? The right hon. the Colonial Secretary on Friday last declared that he had in his possession copies of some letters which were not proper letters to be written by British subjects, and that these letters were written by Members of this House. I say that, under these circumstances, it is really incumbent upon the right hon. Gentleman, in the interests of this House, in the interests of the country, and in the interest of himself, to produce these letters with the names of the writers without any more delay. If he will not do that, it is not playing fair with us. Here we are, a lot of suspected men. I have even heard my own name mentioned in the Lobby as being suspected of having written a letter to a Boer. I say that it is most unfair to withhold this information, because we are going to a General Election very shortly. I am told that elections are conducted in all sorts of ways. I would be quite willing to condone any sort of dexterity in the matter, but I do think that this last manœuvre of the right hon. Gentleman is playing it a little too low; to use a phrase of the day, I should say it is rather "slim." For what will happen? If nothing more is stated about these letters, every man on the Liberal side will go to his constituents in an atmosphere of suspicion, insinuation, and innuendo. That is not proper. I would ask the right hon. Gentleman, on this, the last occasion on which we meet, to take the manly line, and let the House know all about the letters. Then we can part in peace, feeling that when we do go into fight a few months hence we will do it in a straightforward, honourable manner.

Mr. BRYN ROBERTS (Carnarvonshire, Eifion) said it was not often that he agreed with the hon. Member for the Ecclesall Division, but the debate on the Appropriation Bill had been reduced to the condition in which nearly all the debates this session had been reduced. Prominent Members were always called upon, and were sure of an opportunity to address the House, while ordinary Members were practically excluded from taking any part in the discussions, and as soon as a few prominent men had spoken the closure was moved. In his view the closure was never intended to interfere with the right of debate on the part of any Member, however humble he might be, but was only meant to put down obstruction. He desired to draw the attention of the Under Secretary for War to a matter of some importance to Volunteer officers. Complaints had been made to him with reference to the Royal Military Academy. Officers of the Regular Army were permitted to send their sons to that Academy at reduced rates, while the sons of Volunteer officers, of however long standing, were obliged to pay £150 a year for the admission of each of their sons. He wanted to know how that was. It seemed to him that it was part of a regular plan, he did not say followed by the Government, but by the War Office, of discountenancing the Volunteer movement in every possible way, and dissociating it as much as possible from any privileges granted to the Regular Army, and putting the Volunteers in a sort of inferior status. Having regard to the large expenditure of the Volunteer officers, they ought to be put upon a par with their brothers in the Army in this matter. The difficulty with regard to the Volunteer movement was the difficulty of getting officers, who would not come forward because of the enormous expense to which they were put. Did not that give them as great a claim as that of the officers in the Army to have their sons admitted into the military college at a reduced fee, especially having regard to the fact that the war in South Africa had shown that for the purposes of offence and aggression the Volunteers had proved themselves not unworthy to stand and fight beside the picked military forces of this country? He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would give an assurance that the officers of Volunteers would be treated in this matter upon terms of perfect equality with officers of the Regular Army. He felt constrained whilst addressing the House to make some reference to the war in the Transvaal, and the point to which he desired to draw attention was one which had received too little attention in the House. It was an undisputed fact that martial law was an illegal law, only justified by the extremest necessity to protect Her Majesty's subjects in the district where that martial law was administered. There was no justification for resorting to it when the ordinary courts were open. The result of putting martial law into force in the Transvaal had been that men suspected merely of having had commercial dealings with the enemy, when the enemy was in the colony, had been arrested and kept in prison for weeks and months without bail. In some cases the ordinary law of the country intervened, and writs of habeas corpus had been issued, with the result that the military authorities, not venturing to defend their proceedings, had liberated the prisoners, and when those persons had returned to their own homes they had been again arrested. Many persons were also aware that the administration of this martial law had been entrusted to colonials from districts for which they had been elected, and the result had been that these colonial politicians had abused the authority they possessed by arresting their political opponents. Such a proceeding was unheard of in a civilised country, and one which one would have supposed could not have taken place outside Turkey. It was a scandal that ought to be brought to the attention of the Government. We had a right to distrust the colonials of South Africa. It was because of the lying assurances of these people that we had been dragged into this hideous war. [Cries of "Oh, oh!"] It was indubitably true. He alluded to the colonial financial gang in South Africa. A telegram to the hon. Member for Rochester had appeared recently in an evening paper, which said that every assurance which had been given to the Government by those men before the war had been false. We were told by the leader of the gang that the Transvaal army was the greatest unpricked bubble in the world. Did the Government believe that now?

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT asked whether the hon. Gentleman would quote the telegram.

MR. BRYN ROBERTS said he had not it in his possession, but he had seen it in an English newspaper. One of the assurances these people gave was that the Boer army could not keep the field for a fortnight, that they could not feed themselves, and would vanish away in about a month. Those statements were persisted in to the last. The last lie that was told was that in order to keep up the fighting spirits of the burghers the President had to resort to all sorts of lies; but, when General Prinsloo surrendered, 3,000 or 4,000 of his burghers declined to obey him and lay down their arms, and went away prepared to go on fighting. When should we listen to common sense in this matter? The men in the Transvaal who had given their blood and laid down their lives—and their wives and children also laid down their lives in many cases—knew something about their own business. Was it to be supposed that they did not know for what they were fighting? If there was anything that would raise a suspicion in an ordinary human mind it would be the idea that the President was making use of them for his own purposes; and if that had been true the burghers would have discovered it long before the people of this country. The men who were fighting were men who lived upon the veldt, and the only human motive which could induce them to make the sacrifices they had made was to preserve their independence or the independence of their country. We were fighting to take away that independence, we were not fighting for honour. Honour called upon us to desist from this fighting. Honour called upon this country to abide by its promises, its treaties, and declarations. When the Colonial Secretary was pleading with President Kruger for the lives of the Jameson raiders, Mr. Fairfield wrote at his instigation or under his direction to the Chartered Company calling attention to our treaties with the Transvaal. The right hon. Gentleman assured the President that he would perform all the obligations of the Convention of 1884. It was a solemn promise, solemnly made, and he had broken it in a manner which brought disgrace upon this country. The war was carried on for the basest motives that could actuate politicians—greed and aggrandisement. Immediately after the war began, the Prime Minister stated that we sought no territory, that we sought no goldfields; but now, under the malign influence that had led the present Government into all the difficulties and iniquities which, in his opinion, had been perpetrated, the Prime Minister had been forced practically to abandon that attitude. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fifeshire had publicly stated that no single reasonable politician in this country was in favour of annexation, and that if anyone connived at it in any shape or form he would thereby give colour a hundredfold to the charges of insincerity and Pharisaism levelled at this country by the Continental press. The right hon. Gentleman had been extremely silent during the session. He appeared, while sitting on the Front Bench, to be in a brown study. He did not know the subject of the right hon. Gentleman's meditation, but he rather suspected he was thinking how he could best get out of the declaration he had made. He hoped that was not so; but he held that when a responsible politician on either side of the House made such a solemn declaration as that he ought to stand to it. He trusted that his right hon. friend would stand to it, whatever pressure might be put upon him, and that he would denounce this aggression and annexation. This matter, as had been truly said, had brought disgrace and discredit on the country more than anything had ever done. This country occupied a position as bad as any ever occupied by Russia in its treatment of Poland, or by Austria in its treatment of Hungary.

ADMIRAL FIELD (Sussex, Eastbourne) said he became aware last year of a great abuse and gross injustice, and he did his best, by means of questions addressed to his right hon. friend the Secretary to the Treasury, to draw public attention to the subject. He referred to the abuse existing in certain divisions of the High Court in connection with the retirement, or rather the non-retirement of the clerks in these courts. The Ridley Commission reported on the subject some years ago, and an Order in Council was issued laying down rules which provided that clerks should retire at the age of sixty-five, except in special cases where the services of individuals were further required. It appeared from an answer given to a question which he put to his right hon. friend that the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, and the late Master of the Rolls held that the rules with respect to the retirement of clerks, which were applicable to every office under the Crown, did not apply and should not apply to the clerks of the High Court. Last year he had personally to go to the Probate Court to prove the will of a relative, and there he saw some elderly men. He asked how it was that they were there, and what salary they received. One of them told him he was ashamed to say that he was receiving £200 a year, after occupying the same position for twenty-two years. His right hon. friend when questioned on the subject told him that the Lord Chancellor was unable to obtain the assent of all the judges to the adoption of the Report of the Commission. That seemed to imply that the Lord Chancellor was in favour of the adoption of the rules. He put another question to his right hon. friend as to whether there were any statutory difficulties in the way of these judges adopting the rules with respect to the High Court. The reply was that the legal authorities were in disagreement on the subject. His questions led Sir Francis Jeune to ask what the grievance was, and he wrote fully to that distinguished judge, who, after inquiring into the matter, applied the rules to the clerks in his department. Why did not the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice see that these rules were applied in the other divisions of the High Court? From a Return showing the number of clerks still serving beyond the age of sixty-five because the judges would not allow them to have the benefit of the retirement scheme of the Ridley Commission, he found that there were twenty-five. There were in all fifty-nine who would probably come within the rules. One gentleman was seventy-five, another seventy-two, two were seventy-one, one was seventy, three were sixty-nine, five were sixty-eight, five were sixty-seven, two were sixty-six, and five were sixty-five. By continuing these clerks in the service of the Crown, the zeal of the clerks below them was being killed, because promotion was blocked. This matter did not concern him individually. It only concerned him as a lover of justice. This was a grievance that ought to be remedied, and it should not be in the power of the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice to ignore the recommendations of the Ridley Commission and the rules approved by the Government.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.) said this was the last opportunity there could be this session of complaining in this House that documents which had been referred to by a right hon. Gentleman on the Treasury Bench, which had been exploited for party purposes, and to which that right hon. Gentleman gave his own version—documents connected with the honour of Members of this House—had not been produced for the consideration of the House. It was the absolute duty of the Colonial Secretary, or of the Cabinet, if they had these documents, to produce them to Parliament, and not to keep them in hand as an electioneering manœuvre—not to allow Members of the present Parliament to suffer from sinister rumours, but to have the matter cleared up at once. He belonged to a party which had suffered from letters and documents. They all recollected the Pigott transaction. He wanted to protect his hon. friends on that side from a bastard Pigott campaign in khaki. He would address himself to the First Lord of the Treasury, in the absence of the Colonial Secretary. Although they had always been opposed to each other, he ventured to assert that, outside his own personal friends, there was no one in this House who had a greater admiration for the right hon. Gentleman than he had. He appealed to him as a gentleman of honour not to permit a campaign of slander and calumny to be launched against Members of this House—not to permit members of the Treasury Bench to promote such a campaign, involving inferences as to these letters and their authors for party purposes. This House ought to vindicate the honour of its Members. It should insist upon the documents being produced, and thus put an end to all sinister rumours. He ventured to say that if the right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary would permit him to give an answer about these incriminating documents, he would give the right hon. Gentleman one he would never forget. The right hon. Gentleman was now conspicuous by his absence, but he had stated that he would communicate with the incriminated Members. He was constituting himself the guardian of the honour of Members of this House. He had innumerable Under Secretaries, like Daniel the Prophet, and he had put on his considering cap. He only communicated with the hon. Members on Monday evening. Was it not clear from that that he did not want to get an answer before Parliament was prorogued? Why was he so careful about not producing these letters? He (Mr. McNeill) was certain that if there had been anything really disparaging politically in them, he would have produced them post haste. He was treating these hon. Members as disgracefully as he treated the House in regard to the Hawksley-Rhodes and the Hawksley-Chamberlain correspondence, copies of which he still had in the Colonial Office. It was true that he swore before the Committee that he did not keep copies of the letters. He was a man of honour—he was an expert in honour——

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Member must not use an expression of that sort. He must not indulge in offensive personal recrimination.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: What did I say, Sir?

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member said sarcastically that the right hon. Gentleman was an expert in honour. He must know that such an expression practically accuses him of dishonour.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Perhaps I was wrong in saying that. But I had in mind at the time the observation of the right hon. Gentleman that Mr. Rhodes was a man whose honour was untarnished. I think, therefore, there was some excuse for my observation. Continuing, the hon. Member said he wished to draw attention to the case of our dying soldiers in the South African hospitals. He had to make one observation about that, and he intended to make it, whether or not it gave offence to the First Lord of the Treasury. He was as certain as he was of his own existence that the lives and health of these men had been cruelly and absolutely disregarded, for political, personal, and strategical purposes.

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! If the hon. Member means that, as I gather he does, as a reflection upon Ministers sitting on the Front Bench, he is not entitled to use such language.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I never mentioned such a thing, and I never referred to such a thing. I am afraid I am singularly unfortunate if you misconstrue me in such a way as that. I did not refer to them. If you wish me to name the person to whom I did refer, I am prepared to do so.

*MR. SPEAKER: I entirely accept the hon. Member's disclaimer.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL said he was not referring to the gentlemen on the Front Bench. He could only conclude that they knew nothing about the events with which he was dealing. But, on the other hand, they ought to have known. They ought to have been aware that in the management of the hospitals in South Africa there had been criminal negligence. On that point he had some testimony to lay before the House. The Archbishop of Cape Town, writing in a paper under the control of Mr. Rhodes, of the date 27th June, declared that there was great dissatisfaction at the way in which our sick and wounded were treated at several of the hospitals. He had had complaints from personal friends of the strong feeling which existed. Warm clothing was greatly needed, and, somehow or other, although it had been sent out, it was being withheld—either the doctors said it was not required, or they could not get it. Thus the blankets provided by charitable societies had never reached the troops at all. The Archbishop was speaking of the hospitals in his own diocese, and he said there had been great and horrible mismanagement. There was another witness—Mr. Michael Davitt—who had been travelling in the Transvaal. He had stated, in an interview with a correspondent, that he was convinced from what he learnt when he was in the neighbourhood of Bloemfontein that the hon. Member for Westminster had understated his case, and that the condition of the sick and wounded at that place when Lord Roberts entered was most distressing. He had heard Boers say that the Tommies were treated, or rather were neglected, as if they were Kaffirs. He went on to say that nothing could be better than the prompt attention given to the sick and wounded Tommies who happened to fall into the hands of the Boers. He visited several Boer hospitals, and never heard a single complaint as to the treatment of the patients. Great as had been the amount of sickness, there was no doubt that much more would occur, seeing how both air and water were polluted by the carcases of the thousands of animals that had been killed and were left unburied. He (Mr. MacNeill) was himself a sufferer from these causes. Two of his relatives had already succumbed to disease, and he wished to express his belief that there had been gross mismanagement on the part of the hospital administrative department. He had before this given expression to his personal feelings, and he must say he was disappointed at the manner in which the First Lord of the Treasury had received the representations as to the miserable, horrible, and ill-ventilated hospitals, with every accompaniment of human misery. He ought to have been rejoiced at receiving the information, instead of being angry with the hon. Member, who practically took his political life in his hands, who put politics altogether out of the matter, and who came forward with his disclosures solely in the interests of humanity. Although he believed he would be in order in doing so, he did not propose to-day to question the constitution of the Hospital Commission. But he would like to say that it ought to have been empowered to take the evidence of ordinary paid assistants, and that the reasons given for not granting it that power were both flimsy and invalid. The reference to the Commission which had been appointed was such that it was bound to be used for "whitewashing" purposes. This ought not to be. He hoped the cries of the sufferers in South Africa would be heard throughout the length and breadth of the land, and that the War Office administration, which had been shown to be so flagrantly guilty in these matters, would be emphatically condemned by an outraged public opinion. He desired to say a word with reference to the Under Secretary of State for War. There was no Minister in the House who gave so complete, generous, and satisfactory answers as the hon. Gentleman—when he did not understand the effect of those answers. A few days ago, in reply to a question, he said there were 385 civil medical officers, as distinct from the Army Medical Department, who had been sent to the hospitals in South Africa. A day or two afterwards the hon. Gentleman was asked how many of the Army Medical Reserve, consisting of gentlemen who had retired after twenty or twenty-five years service, had been employed, and the answer was that out of ninety-eight only four had been sent to South Africa. An Army medical man with twenty years experience would have been able to dictate to the officers and say how many ambulances and other appliances should go up. But the War Office did not want such men of experience; they wanted men who could be coerced by the military commanders. Everyone knew his opinion of the war. He regarded it as one of the blackest and foulest transactions in the history of mankind. The Irish regiments, especially the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers and the Irish Rifles, had been shamefully treated. The Fusiliers left Queenstown on 3rd November, 1,135 strong; on the last day at Colenso they numbered only twenty-six men and three officers all told. They were deliberately placed in the forefront of the battle during the whole of the Natal campaign, though they did not complain of that until they were practically extinguished, and yet not a single kindly observation of their action ever appeared in a despatch or paper; the news was left to dribble out through private letters. When the regiment lost its officers, where did the promotion come in? The major who had fought in the engagements was passed over, and Englishmen who had seen nothing of the war were brought in from other regiments by the action of a set of distinguished gentlemen known as the Board of Promotion, sitting in a back parlour of the War Office, while the men who shed their blood in England's battles were cheated out of their just and honourable promotion. The same course of action had been pursued with regard to the Irish Rifles. Then there was a matter in regard to which he wished to defend himself. The hon. Member for Forfar the previous day asked when the despatches subsequent to Stormberg would be published. He wished to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if he would guarantee that when these despatches were published they would not be sub-edited at the War Office for public consumption. Sir Redvers Buller had stated that he did not like the idea of rewriting a despatch for publication, and that he would rather leave it in the hands of the Commander-in-Chief. He should not have asked this question but for Sir Redvers Buller's refusal to write a despatch for public consumption. Again and again he had asked for the publication of those despatches, which were being kept back because they affected illustrious men. Something was being kept back from the public, which if they knew would alter their opinion of the Government and their conduct of the war. The most shocking case was the Magersfontein disaster, in which battle the Scotch brigade were actually destroyed and ruined. Lord Methuen was in command there. The whole of the northern campaign—which resulted in the battles of Graspan, Belmont, Modder River, and Magersfontein—was a campaign solely prompted by a desire to save Mr. Rhodes. Therefore every drop of blood that was shed in those battles was shed simply to preserve one man. If they thought this one man was worth sacrificing 3,000 lives and 9,000 wounded men, he did not envy their opinion. In regard to Spion Kop, he had received a telegram from a distinguished gentleman who had been in command of the Seaforth Highlanders, and he said that he considered his regiment had been destroyed by mismanagement. There was another aspect of this case which had not been brought under public notice at all, although he had endeavoured to do so by means of questions. He believed that some of our officers had been guilty of gross cruelty to their men. He had seen a letter from a correspondent drawing a very horrible picture as to how their soldiers were punished in the field. He had read that, for some offences committed in the field, soldiers had been tied securely to posts, and left in the sun for two or three hours, according to the sentence. This accusation appeared in the Daily Graphic of the 23rd of June, 1900. Surely there must be something behind this, when a statement appears in a highly respectable English paper that English soldiers had been crucified under the African sun. Those were the kind of things which were going on and which were being kept from them by an atrocious system of unworthy concealment. He wished to say a few words in regard to the press censorship, which was one of the most atrocious systems he had ever heard of. The press censorship in South Africa had been managed for political purposes. Of course, statesmen of the first class would not speak on the Third Reading of the Appropriation Bill, but perhaps as the shadow of the General Election was falling on the Treasury Bench, the House might receive words of wisdom from the right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary. He wished to make an allegation, and he would repeat it at any public meeting at which South Africa was referred to. It was that industrious men who had gone out from the Cornish mines and were making £3, £4, and £5 a week at the Johannesburg mines, were put out bag and baggage when the war began. When they wished to return to Johannesburg the greatest consternation was shown at the Government House, Cape Town, and at the Colonial Office, and warning telegrams were issued telling them not to come back. These Englishmen were sent away from Johannesburg in order that the German Jews and other capitalists might employ Kaffir labour. That was one of the pecuniary advantages of a just, righteous, and necessary war! At a meeting of the Consolidated Goldfields it was stated how much cheaper it would be to employ Kaffir labour. That was to be a result of the war, which was undertaken for the franchise, and he trusted English working men would understand that. No one could accuse him of speaking for an electioneering purpose. He did not think there were ten Liberal Imperialists among his constituents—they were wise men—but he would not take any honour or any wealth to be for five minutes under the responsibility for the war, which he believed attached to the Colonial Secretary. Some things might be in doubt, but he was certain that if anyone else had been at the Colonial Office except the right hon. Gentleman there would have been no war. He was as certain of that as he was of his own existence. It had given him many painful and miserable nights when he remembered that if Parliament had been called together one week earlier last October there would have been no war. Sir Edward Clarke's speech would have affected public opinion, the whole conspiracy would have been disclosed, and the country would not have been forced into war. The irritating speeches from members of the Cabinet followed, and Sir Alfred Milner acted as if he were the subservient tool of the capitalists. He did not accuse the English people of the war. He did not accuse the Cabinet, he did not even accuse the Colonial Secretary of it, but the right hon. Gentleman was gravely responsible for it. He was perfectly certain that if the right hon. Gentleman had had the slightest idea of what the results of the war would be he would never have entered on it. The right hon. Gentleman did not know what he was doing. Personally, he (Mr. MacNeill) was thankful that he was only a foreigner in the House, and had nothing to do with the war. The most warlike did not think that 500 lives would be lost, but there had been sent back from South Africa more wounded and crippled men than the whole Boer army. That was a horrible story. He did not count the cost of the war in money, but 60,000 human beings had been sacrificed who, but for the war, would be in full health and strength to-day. There was a terrible expression in the Hebrew prophets about fathers giving up their sons and daughters to devils, but these men were sacrificed—their hands were imbued in the blood of the Boers—because of the abominable lust for gold. The Boer train of thought did not appeal to him very much, but the Boers were a magnificent race, absolutely above all considerations of pelf. They liked to lead pastoral lives, and, if their ideas were in some respects rustic and uncouth, they had magnificent traits of character. The First Lord of the Treasury used an expression which was unworthy of him in the great speech he delivered at Manchester. He said he could not understand the inconceivable folly of the Orange Free State joining in the war, as in any result they could not have been a penny the better off. But they did not consider pence; they considered the claims of blood and kindred, and the freedom for which their forefathers fought, and for which they were willing to be sacrificed, and if they had not achieved success they certainly deserved it. They had proved themselves to be the worthy descendants of men who went into the forest twice to avoid the British lust for gold. They were great men, glorious men, who were prepared to give up their lives for an ideal. It was thought that because they knew they would be beaten they would resign themselves to the inevitable, but they were actuated by considerations infinitely superior to such selfish motives. They recognised that it was better to be beaten than to relinquish their independence. He was sorry for the war. He came of a military stock himself, and he was sorry because of many dear ones who were engaged in the war, but he was more sorry because the war was a degradation of common humanity, and an offence against the great God and His Son whom all should love.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): I do not think the House will expect or desire that I should reply at any length to the discursive speech to which we have just listened. It was of course, to be expected that on the last day of the session the hon. Member for South Donegal would add one more to those numerous speeches which he has made during the session, in which he has spoken so much and said so little. It was also naturally to be expected that that speech would contain an attack upon the Colonial Secretary. I find it very difficult to treat the hon. Gentleman very seriously. He poses in this House as the avowed enemy of this country, and he and his friends declare themselves to be foreigners and opposed to our policy. They are the people who cheered the Mahdi and who cheered some other savage chiefs with whom we were at war, and who now approve the action of the Boers. It does not matter what the war is or what the cause is, provided Great Britain is engaged, these hon. Gentlemen profess to side with our opponents. But I think probably I might take the hon. Member seriously if I thought he meant all he said. He is accustomed to rhetorical flights, and I attribute what would be very offensive in anybody else to a rather emotional and excitable nature. Take the speech to which we have just listened. Again and again he stated that he did not intend to throw any accusations across the floor of the House, or attack any class or party. But his speech was from beginning to end a series of most extravagant imputations upon everybody with whom he professes to have a quarrel. He declared that the wilful and deliberate negligence of the whole medical service in South Africa had been the cause of the deaths of our soldiers. He then came down to the Government, and said valuable lives had been sacrificed for political purposes. Is that an imputation? He went on to accuse Lord Lansdowne of political and discreditable motives because he had done what, I think, any person of common sense would think a very natural and courteous thing to do—namely, to give Sir Redvers Buller an opportunity of saying whether or not he wished to revise a despatch which he did not know was intended for publication. Then the hon. Gentleman went on to fall foul of Lord Kitchener and other officers. He appears to be a military expert. He holds himself justified in criticising the operations of the officers in the field and the conduct of our generals. He attacks the officers with charges of cruelty which he has discovered in some sensational paragraph in a newspaper.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I made no attack upon the officers. I said that is a matter which should be considered. I said that the working officers are above suspicion.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: The working officers are above imputation, and yet they crucify their men on the field! That proves what I am saying, that the hon. Gentleman is really not aware of the force of his language. He does not know how very fierce his invective is when he gives us a dramatic performance, but it may affect some people outside who do not know him as well as we do. They believe that he is quite in earnest. Then he comes home and attacks the Board of Promotion, and assumes that every member of this Board is animated with a fiendish sentiment which leads them to promote the wrong people, and especially not to promote the friends of the hon Member. Finally he falls foul of the Colonial Secretary, and accuses him of most improper conduct in refraining from the publication of certain letters, and attributes to him some terrible motives in connection with them. I wonder amongst whom, in what society, the life of the hon. Gentleman is ordinarily passed? Where does he get these low ideas of humanity? Where has he conceived that any person with whom he has the slightest acquaintance in public life could be capable of these improprieties? Really, however, the very extravagance of the hon. Gentleman is his best answer. The hon. Baronet the Member for Cockermouth asked me for an assurance that certain letters, or alleged letters, to which reference has been made, shall be published as soon as possible, and he gave as his reason for that that he and others were under suspicion. It seems to me a strange thing that the hon. Baronet should complain of being under suspicion, because in the same short speech he suspected me of the most improper motives, and he suggested that somehow or other the time had been carefully devised, and that I was going to hold them back for some mean or improper purpose of my own. But the hon. Baronet has only to go down to his constituents or say in this House that he has not written any letters or done anything objectionable of the kind, and we shall all believe him. Every innocent person is in precisely the same position. I do not think there is this cloud of suspicion resting on the House generally, and I doubt very much whether the hon. Members for whom the hon. Baronet professed to speak will be grateful to him for what he has done. What we have done will commend itself to the general sense of the House. We have come into possession of certain letters the effect of which I do not wish to exaggerate. I expressed my own personal opinion that they are not proper letters to have been written, but beyond that I do not go. They may be forgeries for aught we know. Such things have happened before.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: And have been utilised before.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: If they are not forgeries, they may be open to full and satisfactory explanation. We thought the proper course, therefore, was to send them to the persons who were reputed or alleged to have written them, and to wait for their reply. Something was said about the time at which the matter was referred to. Well, we cannot govern the time at which a matter of this kind becomes public property; but as we only received this correspondence from Bloemfontein a very few days ago—the first part only about a fortnight ago—and as we were told there was more to come, my own idea was that we should wait until we had the whole of the alleged correspondence in our hands before coming to any conclusion. But as the matter became to a certain extent public property, and questions were asked about it, I felt it was desirable and fair that those who were at the present moment concerned should immediately have the opportunity of making any observations they chose to make regarding this alleged correspondence; and having regard to all the contingencies to which the hon. Baronet referred, I think the whole matter should be decided one way or other at the earliest possible moment. But I decline at the present moment to go beyond what I have already said, and that is that as soon as we can get the replies we will come to an immediate decision as to whether the correspondence should be published or not.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs): The only thing which hon. Members on this side of the House who have taken part in the debate have done is to appeal to the sense of fair play in the House. I deprecate the conduct of the right hon. the Colonial Secretary in regard to these South African letters. He says he has received a certain number of private letters written by Members of this House before the war to some man in Bloemfontein. The right hon. Gentleman might have said, "I cannot publish these letters until I have afforded the opportunity to these gentlemen to explain them." That is not the course, however, which the right hon. Gentleman has taken—a perfectly proper course, which would recommend itself to any gentleman in this House. But what does he do? He says, "I do not know whether these letters were written by the gentlemen to whom they are ascribed; they may be forgeries"; but at the same time he says that he will not publish them until he finds from the gentlemen whether they are forgeries or not, and then he quotes the very worst phrases out of them——

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: That is the hon. Gentleman's interpretation.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE: This is rather important, as it affects the honour of Members of this House, especially these words. This is what the right hon. Gentleman said—

> "Two of them were dated just before the outbreak of the war; the other is a request, couched in a form which is certainly open to criticism, for information respecting the administration of martial law."

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: He gives the pith of the letter.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE: Yes; and he gives the pith and purport of another letter. Here it is—

> "The most interesting feature of the South African correspondence is the general admission of substantial grievances, and of the necessity of reform. There are, however, some suggestions that President Kruger might make temporary concessions, and wait for a reaction in this country."

It would have been much fairer if the right hon. Gentleman had quoted the actual words used. If giving the actual words used would have been more damaging to the reputation of hon. Gentlemen on this side of the House, I venture to say the right hon. Gentleman would have done it.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: The hon. Gentleman misunderstands what I said. The purport of these letters had been very greatly exaggerated, and I wished to give the proper effect of the letters. There is another point on which I wish to correct the hon. Member. The letters to which he has now referred, and which showed the existence of real grievances, are not the letters that are attributed to Members of this House, but are letters written in South Africa by British subjects there.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE: Was the letter making "some suggestions that President Kruger might make temporary concessions, and wait for a reaction in this country" written in South Africa? The right hon. Gentleman admits that he gave the purport of the letters, and that is what I complain of. The right hon. Gentleman now explains, "Oh, I did it in order to remove the very exaggerated impressions which prevailed as to what the letters contain." How did these letters, or the purport of them, come out? Real news is censored, and so are the despatches of generals giving the facts; but the moment that any sort of letter which implicates any particular person is discovered, it is not given in its true form, but in what the right hon. Gentleman himself calls an exaggerated form, to the public. If it has been exaggerated who did the exaggeration? It must have been exaggerated by someone in the Colonial Office. [AN HON. MEMBER: No!] I am well within the facts, and why should the hon. Member interrupt me when I am stating the facts? These letters are in the Colonial Office, and have got into the hands of the press. And what has been the result? Every day since Friday last there have been charges of treason, by the friends of the right hon. Gentleman in the press, against hon. Members of this House. Why should the right hon. Gentleman be surprised that hon. Members of this House complain of being under suspicion of being guilty of a capital charge? The hon. Member went on to complain that papers which exaggerated grievances and created fictitious tales of horror about the treatment of refugees and others, which were proved to be absolutely untrue, were now circulating, upon the basis of the replies of the right hon. Gentleman himself, charges of treason wholesale. He saw that one paper of to-day's date called upon the Government to publish the treasonable correspondence; yet the right hon. Gentleman complained because hon. Members came down on the last day of the session and demanded that these letters should be published, and complained of their not having been published before. The right hon. Gentleman said he had had these letters for a fortnight, but did not communicate with the hon. Members because there might have been other letters, and he wished to have the whole of them. On the previous Friday he did communicate with the hon. Members. [Cries from the Government Benches: "Who are they?"] Did not hon. Gentlemen know? Why did they not ask the right hon. Gentleman? He was making the same request himself; it was no use asking him. The right hon. Gentleman knew perfectly well that some of the hon. Members were here at that time, but they had since gone away with the majority of the Members of the House, and he took very good care to communicate with them at a time when no reply could possibly be given before the rising of the House. The right hon. Gentleman knew that if replies could have been received several questions might have arisen. He would probably have been asked why that interpretation had been placed upon these letters, and why certain passages had been withheld. Only what could possibly prejudice the public mind unfairly had been published, and that had been done, he ventured to say, in a way which could not and would not have been done by any other hon. Member of the House. The letters were sent out on the Monday, and the House was to disperse on this Wednesday, and there had been no opportunity to discuss this matter. It was not so easy for a minority in this House to stand up against a war in which this country was engaged, although perhaps the present was the largest minority which had ever opposed a war, and he did not think it was an upright thing to place greater difficulties in the way of the minority than they had to face. It was not a courageous thing on the part of the right hon. Gentleman to attack a small minority in the way in which he had done, and he would not have tried to do it if the minority had been a powerful one. He had taken advantage of the letters to put difficulties in their way in a manner which no courageous statesman would have adopted; they were entitled to a little indulgence and fair play, seeing that the minority was so small. At the present moment the right hon. Gentleman had achieved his purpose, which was that all those who opposed this war should be sent to their constituencies with the suspicion that they had been guilty of treasonable correspondence with the enemy. All the correspondence ought to be published, and not selected passages.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: There were a great many more letters than I was aware of.

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE: It was now admitted by the right hon. Gentleman that there were other letters. He had simply quoted from the right hon. Gentleman's reply. There was one other matter to which he wished to refer—the Report of the War Office Contracts Committee. There had been a great deal said about dynamite scandals in a country 6,000 miles away; he wished to know what the Government proposed to do with regard to certain dynamite scandals rather nearer home. The facts as set out in the exceedingly diluted and restricted Report were sufficiently serious, and showed that there were favoured firms in this country. Tenders having been invited, a certain firm which had sent in the highest tender was told that if they reduced their tender a large order would be given to them. Such a thing had never been done by any monopoly; if it had, the inquiry would have been much more searching, and something would have been done to prevent such a thing taking place in the future. This new firm had been practically made by the War Office. [A Voice: It has been in existence for twenty years.] Nominally, no doubt, it had been in existence for twenty years, but everybody was aware that until certain gentlemen in Birmingham, who had influence with a member of the Government, could say, "If your contracts are too high we can give you another chance," the firm was not known. That firm was made by the War Office. Whatever party in the country suffered by the war, one party in the country was doing well out of it. It was perfectly clear from the evidence before the Committee that an unfair advantage had been given to this firm, and equally clear that some of the officials at the Admiralty felt that there was something that was not right, because they remonstrated with the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, who, he believed, had he been able, would have brought the matter to an end long ago. The House was entitled to ask the War Office whether they intended to carry out ruthlessly the recommendations of the Committee in all respects, because they were proceeding by innuendo in these matters.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Hear, hear! By innuendo.

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE: They were taking a lead from the right hon. Gentleman, who insinuated treason, insinuated impropriety of language, and, above all, who insinuated that he treated hon. Members in a gentlemanly manner by offering them an opportunity of which they could not avail themselves. They were, therefore, entitled to know whether the recommendations of the Committee would be carried out in all respects, because, when the Government was so anxious to redress grievances in and purify the administration of the Transvaal, it was desirable that they should also endeavour to do the same at home.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: The innuendo of the hon. Member is perfectly well understood by the House, and it will, perhaps, justify me in asking the House to allow me to say one or two words in reply. The Report of the Committee I have not seen, nor have I seen the report of the examination of the witnesses. I therefore cannot answer anything the hon. Gentleman has said with reference to what went on before that Committee; but the innuendo is of course that the Colonial Secretary was in some way or another——

AN HON. MEMBER: Your brother.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: In some way or another connected with this matter. Now I wish to say I have no interest, direct or indirect——

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE: I never said so. [Cries of "Order!"]

THE HON. MEMBER rose amid loud cries of "Order!" to make some further remarks, but Mr. CHAMBERLAIN declined to give way. Thereupon

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE said: I rise to a point of order, Sir. The right hon. Gentleman is speaking a second time by the indulgence of the House. I do not object to that, and I do not think hon. Members object, but at the same time I wish to say that there is a misrepresentation of the charge I made. I never even suggested——

*MR. SPEAKER: As the hon. Member has risen to a point of order, I must tell him that what he is now saying has no reference to any point of order. A Member in possession of the House is not bound to give way to another who wishes to correct a misrepresentation. That is not a point of order.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE: Then I shall ask leave to refer to the matter later on.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN (continuing): I have no interest, direct or indirect, in Kynoch's or in any other firm manufacturing ammunition or war materials. I have never interfered directly or indirectly with the distribution of these contracts, and I have never spoken to anyone in the War Office about them. I have no more to do with them than the hon. Member opposite. The hon. Gentleman who interrupted me just now stated what is public property—namely, that my brother is chairman of Kynoch's. That is perfectly true, but I have never discussed the matter with my brother. I have nothing whatever to do with his private concerns, any more than he has anything to do with my public concerns, and it is a gross abuse—[Cries of "Order!"]—it is a gross abuse to attack a public man through his relatives, for whom he is not responsible.
